INTRODUCTION

§ 1. THE KANDANUKRAMA.

In the Kāndānukrama, which claims to be a product of the Ātreyī Çākhā of the Black Yajurveda, is given a summary of the contents of the texts of the Çākhā: in it the Brāhmana and the Āranyaka are considered as well as the Sanhitā, and the whole division as explained by the commentator runs as follows:

Then follow three Upaniṣads, the Sānhitī (Aranyaka, vii), the Yājnikī (ibid. x), and the Vāruņī (ibid. viii and ix). After that the tradition of Tittiri ends, and there are eight Kāṭhaka sections, the Sāvitra (Brāhmaṇa, iii. 10), the Nāciketa (iii. 11), the Cāturhotra (iii. 12. 5), the Vaiçvasrja (iii. 12. 6-9), the Āruṇa (Āranyaka, i) being five modes of fire-piling; the Divaḥçyenayaḥ and Apādyā Iṣṭayaḥ (Brāhmaṇa, iii. 12. 1 and 2; 3 and 4) and the Svādhyāyabrāhmaṇa (Āranyaka, ii).

It will be seen from the above list that the text of the Sanhitā was apparently before the compiler of the Kāṇḍānukrama in much the same order as to-day with certain important exceptions. Thus the Yājyā verses are collected as one Kāṇḍa (21), and not scattered over the first four books of the Sanhitā as at present, being added to the several Praçnas as their last Anuvāka. Then the Açvamedha is gathered as one special portion; in the Omitted in Bibl. Sansk. ed. which has Ārunyaka, iii. 20, 21 (already included in 3 above).

 6 in Bibl. Sansk.; see p. xxvii, n. 3 present text room has been found for the passages at the end of the Praçnas of the fifth and seventh books with some scattered sections in iv and i. Again, the treatment of the Hotr's duties in the new and full moon sacrifice is collected as Kāṇḍa 38, whereas it now stands in ii. 5 and 6 and in i. 7. On the other hand, the Brāhmaṇa and the Araṇyaka are treated with little ceremony, the only part of the former which is taken consecutively being ii. 2-iii. 12.

It appears to be a fair conclusion that the Kāndānukrama knew the Sanhitā practically in its present form, but hardly in the exact order of the text as it stands, or if it knew that order it preferred to deviate from it with the end of bringing into their proper place those parts of the Brāhmaṇa which should complete the ritual; the most obvious defects of the Sanhitā, the omission of the ritual of piling the fire (Kāṇḍa 5), the omission of the description of the Vājapeya (Kāṇḍa 11), and of the Rājasūya (Kāṇḍa 22) are thus made good, and the supplementary chapters of the Brāhmaṇa receive due place. Moreover a Kāṇḍa omitted in the first section of the Kāṇḍānukrama is mentioned in ii. 8 as Vaiçvadeva, and it is nothing else than the Mantrapāṭha, Praçnas 1 and 2, preceded by the Pariṣecana Mantras and the Vaiçvadeva Mantras.

The only omission from the list of Anuvakas is that of vii. 5. 24, which is clearly passed over absolutely. It is, however, certain that this passage is early, for it is known to Baudhāyana (xv. 2) and to Apastamba (xx. 2. 2) and has a parallel in the Kāthaka Sanhitā (Açv. i. 1). But it is perfectly possible that the Atreyas rejected the use of this Anuvaka just as they made an excursion beyond the canon into the Mantrapatha. It is recorded in the Kāndānukrama (ii. 25, 26) that the Atreyas took their text from Tittiri through Ukha,2 and therefore it is impossible to postulate perfect accuracy of agreement between the Taittiriya Sanhitā and the Anukrama. What is important is that the correspondence seems to have been so close even in a comparatively late text like the Kāndānukrama, a work which belongs beyond question to the Paricista type of literature, and allows of no approximate dating. The fact of the difference of school invalidates in all probability the suggestion of Winternitz 3 that it was composed before the Taittirīya Brāhmana and the Āranyaka took their present form, although this is perfectly possible and is to some extent supported by its recognition of eight Kāthaka sections; a recognition which is supported by the absence in these sections of the resolution of i and ii, which are characteristic of the Taittiriya school.4

It should be added that there is no apparent ground for the theory that the text of the Taittirīya is that adopted by the Āpastamba school in special. The term Āpastambī Sanhitā¹ or Āpastamba Sanhitā² is apparently without any ancient authority, and the fact is clear that the Āpastamba school was only a Sūtra school, accepting a Sanhitā handed down by tradition, not arranging one. That Sanhitā must have gone back at least to the Khāndikīyas, of which the Āpastambas are a subdivision in the Caranavyūha, but if the Khāndikīyas and Aukhīyas had different Sanhitās they must have differed as little, to judge from the Anukramanī of the Ātreyas, as the Çākala and Bāṣkala versions of the Rgveda. Bühler² asserts that the Caranavyūha attributes to the Khāndikīyas one and the same text, but this statement with its details which show that our Sanhītā is meant is not contained in Weber's edition of that text.

§ 2. THE PADA PĀŢHA AND THE PRĀTIÇĀKHYA.

The Saihitā and the Pada Pāṭhas. The Pada text of the Taittirīya Saihitā has been exhaustively discussed by Weber, who has compared its method of treatment with that of the other Pada texts. The Kāṇḍānu-krama sacribes the making of the Pada text to an Ātreya, just as the Pada and Krama texts of the Rgweda are ascribed to Çākalya and Bābhravya, and the Pada of the Chandoga to Gārgya. There appears in its treatment of grammar some ground for dating it earlier than the Pada of the Rgweda: the latter indeed is simpler in its treatment of the analysis of words into their component elements, but it would be unwise to build any theory on that fact. The Pada of the Vājasaneyi Saihitā follows closely the principles of the Pada of the Rgweda, and this accords with the fact that the Vājasaneyi itself in its readings constantly stands closer to the Rgweda than the texts of the Black Yajurveda.

Unlike the Pada text of the Maitrāyanī Sanhitā the Pada of the Taittirīya presents no variants to the Sanhitā text. But in a few cases the Pada seems deliberately to endeavour to remove irregularities from the Sanhitā. Thus in iv. 7. 5. 1 trápuç ca me is replaced by the later trápu, and in iv. 7. 15 f, mithuç cárantam becomes mithu, and the Prātiçākhya (v. 4) records the variation. Similarly súçcandra (iv. 4. 4 u) and succandra (ii. 2. 12 aa) figure as su-candra, and sáms kurute (v. 6. 6. 4; vi. 5. 5. 2) becomes sám kurute; the procedure is the more noteworthy in that in v. 6. 6. 4 samskýtya is found, and this stands undivided in accordance with the usual rule observed in the text and noted in the Prātiçākhya (xvi. 26). So in vi. 2. 3. 1 sám askurvata becomes sám akurvata. More extraordinary and, according to Whitney, hard to parallel in any other Pada text, is the treatment of ii. 3. 14 x where nīcād uccā becomes nīcā and the Prātiçākhya (v. 8) provides for the reinsertion of a d. Equally unjustifiable is the change of ásamartyai in iii. 3. 8. 2 to ásamṛtyai. Other cases of note are the restoration of īm in iv. 1. 8 e for ī mandrāsu, where the Prātiçākhya would most absurdly read īm andrāsu, of útstabdhyai in vi. 6. 4. 6 for úttabdhyai, and very remarkably of ékam-ekam in v. 1. 1, 2 for ékaikam and ékayā-ekayā in vii. 5. 8. 4 for ékaikayā. But these changes are isolated, and as a rule the Pada records the worst errors of the Sanhitā with absolute fidelity.²

The Relation of the Pada and the Praticakhya. It is absolutely certain that the Praticakhya recognizes the existence of a Pada text. though there is good reason to believe that the Krama and the Jata texts were not taken into account in the original form of the Prāticākhya.3 But Whitney 1 left undecided the question whether there were not differences between the Pada text as handed down and the Prāticākhya which forbade the view that the latter recognized the former. Weber, to whom he looked for a decision of this question, left it untouched, but there can be little doubt that the evidence for a variation between the Pada and the Prāticākhya cannot be considered as of importance. On the one hand must be set the fact which Whitney admits and proves, that in many details of an unusual character (such as are exhibited in cases like nicd(d), ékam-ekam above) the Prūticākhya accepts the vagaries of the Pada without question. On the other hand, the apparent difference between the Praticakhya and the mode of accenting separable words rests only on a doubtful rendering of xx. 3. That rule lays down the principle that a dependent Svarita, if following an acute in another word, is called Prātihata, e.g. in iṣé tvā (i. 1. 1. 1) tvā has a Prātihata Svarīta, but not yā in táyā devátayā (iv. 2. 9. 2) or the Svarita in yán nyàncam (v. 5. 3. 2). To this explanation of the commentary Whitney objected that the rule had no parallel elsewhere and seemed devoid of a real basis, as indeed is the case. He therefore suggested that the rule really meant what is meant in the Vājasaneyi Prāticākhya (i. 118) by tairovirāma, namely the dependent Svarita which in the Pada text falls upon the first syllable of the second member of a compound under the influence of an acute final of the first member, and thus is separated by a pause, e.g. the va of cukrávatī. The designation would serve conveniently to distinguish such a Svarita from the Nitya Svarita described in xx. 2. But this explanation presupposes a Pada in which the compound when analysed by an Avagraha is still accented as one word, and the Taittiriya Pada text considers the Avagraha as a complete breach of continuity. Whitney therefore was compelled to suggest that the Pada known to the Prātiçākhya was not identical with the existing Pada. But ingenious as the suggestion is, it can hardly be deemed to be valid. As Whitney points out, the Sutra, xx. 3, is very curiously worded, as are also the Sutras preceding, all being clumsy and redundant in wording; xx. 2 ends with ity eva janiyat, 3 has a needless api, 1 adds a superfluous udattayoh to the rule, and 8 has iti svāranāmadheyāni. The chapter has only twelve sections, and such a mass of abnormalities ends at once any chance of its original character.1 But even so the interpretation of Whitney, despite its ingenuity, must be rejected: he based his condemnation on the fact that the version of the commentator assumes a break in the continuity of the treatment of the Svarita and attributes to the composer a serious disregard of brevity. But in an addition to the original text these arguments have no application, and the version of the commentator is carried back to an older tradition by the occurrence of the same explanation in the Vyāsaçikṣā,2 yah samānapade svāras tairovyañjana ucyate 11 218 11 pādavrttas tayor vyaktāv anyah prātihatah smṛtah 11 219 11

There is no other evidence against the identity of the Pada known to the Prātiçākhya with the Pada as it now exists. Whitney himself did not argue difference from what he at one time, through want of a Pada text, considered a very unusual awkwardness of expression in the Prātiçākhya. In iv. 6 is given a rule under which o if asānhita and followed by a or a consonant is pragraha, i.e. followed by iti in the Pada text. Whitney concluded from this that the Prātiçākhya was erroneously or accidentally laying down a rule by which the treatment of a vocative like visno differed according to its position, but he later learned from Weber, who had a Pada MS., that the rule was observed, a striking proof that the Pada known to

the Prātiçākhya was one singularly like the known text. Even then, however, he considered that the rule when read with iv. 7 which makes an o always pragraha if following s, m, h, d, th, and pit, omitted the case of o, uto, upo, and pro. This, however, is, as Lüders has pointed out, an error; these four words occur only in the Sanhitā before consonants, and therefore are not sanhita to the Prātiçākhya, since they are unaltered in the Pada text.

There is one point of some slight interest regarding the attribution to Ātreya of the Pada text. An Ātreya is mentioned twice as an authority by the Prātiçākhya. In xvii. 8, a passage regarded by Whitney 2 as perhaps a later addition, but vindicated as probably original on good grounds by Lüders, 3 he is credited with the doctrine that sounds should be uttered neither too distinctly nor yet indistinctly. In v. 31 he is stated to have prescribed that when a nasal mute was changed to l before l the vowel preceding was nasalized; naturally this is a prescription for the Sanhitā, not the Pada text, and curiously enough the earlier part of the Bibliotheca Indica edition adopts this form of writing which puts before the double l a nasalized vowel. There is no reason to suppose that the Ātreya of the Kānḍānukrama is not the Ātreya of the Prātiçākhya, though of course no absolute proof of identity can be expected.

The Praticakhya and the Sanhita. The identity of the Pada known to the Praticakhya and the existing Pada confirms the conclusion arrived at by Whitney that the Sanhitā as handed down is essentially the same as the Sanhilā known to the Prātiçākhya. It is of course necessary in comparison of the Prātiçākhya with the Sanhitā to take the commentary on the former into account, since otherwise there would be little clue to the passages referred to in the brief rules. The counter-evidence is of very slender dimensions. Four words, stanutar (viii. 8), carsan (xiii. 13), jīgivā (xvi. 13), and jighāsi (xvi. 18), are given from the Sanhitā, but they do not occur there or elsewhere, and seem merely blunders based on the actual words preceding in the rules, sanutar, carman, jigivā, and jigāsi. In the second place, in several passages the commentator on the Prātiçākhya seeks to prove the perfection of that work by attributing to it references to other Çākhās: thus in iv. 11, where viçākhe is declared pragraha, the Prātiçākhya should on its own strict rule (i. 48) merely cite cakhe, as the term is divided ví-çākhe in the Pada of iv. 4. 10. 2, and the commentator therefore explains that the text had in view sahasra-çākhe of another text. The explanation is obviously merely forced: the Prāticākhya doubtless cites viçākhe because cakhe occurs only in that phrase, and other similar cases 1 can equally be disregarded, though in one (xi. 3) the quotation of dhata ratch is irregularly pleonastic. Thirdly, in a few passages2 the commentator illustrates by citations which ought to be on analogy from the Sanhita. In some cases these may be corruptions, in some they rest only on some MSS. of the Prāticākhya, in others they are clearly confusions of memory, as in brahmaudanam pacati, which is quoted to illustrate x. 7, and occurs only in the Brahmana (i. 1. 9. 3), while the same word is found in the Sanhita with pacet (v. 7. 3. 4) or apacat (vi. 4. 6. 1). Fourthly, in a few cases there seem to be oversights: in xvi. 26 no allowance is made for svadusamsádah (iv. 6. 6 i) and strīsamsādám (ii. 5. 1. 5), but in viii. 8 abibhah is cited from ii. 5. 1. 5, and in iii. 7 cáktī from iv. 6. 6 i, showing conclusively that these are mere cases of oversight. The same explanation must cover the failure to exempt devi in vi. 1. 7. 7 from the operation of the rule making it pragraha (i. 61) and the omission to provide for ye 'ntárikse (iv. 5. 11 m) and yé apartsu (i. 4. 33 a) and só agnih (v. 2. 3. 3).

The Differences between the Sanhita of the editions and the Praticakhya. While the points above noted are utterly unimportant, there are certain cases in which the Sanhitā, as preserved in the MSS, and as printed in the editions, differs from the Prātiçākhya, but these are all cases of mere external matters. In the first place the division of the text into Kandikās is obviously artificial. Under it the Anuvākas are each divided into sets of fifty words,3 and at the end of each is set down the last word of each Kandika and the number of words over. If the number is less than thirty the words are included in the last Kandika of the Anuvaka. though its final word is also given, if thirty or more then the words make up a new Kandika, though there are naturally exceptions, such as i. 2, 5, 2. where a new Kandika is allotted to twenty-five words, while in vii. 3. 5. 3 thirty-one words are still reckoned into the previous Kandika. The end of each Prapathaka contains a statement of the number of Kandikas and the first word of each. If an Anuvaka has less than fifty words the number of words and the beginning are given at the end. The text treats each of

See comm. on iv. 11, 12, 15, 37; vi. 5; xi. 3, 16. Other cases are alluded to in xi. 9, 15; xii. 3; xvi. 12; and xiii. 16 (nalam placam). brahma3n on xv. 8 is attributed to another Çākhā, though found in i. 8. 16. 1 and 2. Lūders (op. cit. pp. 43-45) points out that vi. 5 and xi. 15 are mere errors of the comm., the Vedatatjasa giving correct examples from the Sanhitā itself on the corresponding (jikyā rules (126,185): in most of the other cases the Çikyā corrects the Pratigaldya.

Of the cases given by Whitney, p. 426, rakpi in i. 4. 24 a is not in point, as the Pada has rakpa and not rakpih as he thought.

See Weber, Indische Studien, xl. 29; xii. 90; xiii. 97 seq.

these divisions as standing by itself, and thus we find in i. 3. 6 i uçmasi and in iii. 2. 11 f átha, where the Praticakhya clearly reads uçmasī (iii. 13) and athā (ix. 24).1 Weber 2 at one time doubted if the Praticakhya did not, in using the term vibhāgu, refer to this Kandikā division, but he gave up this theory later,3 and Lüders4 points out that the Ciksa (102) expressly recognizes the reading prescribed for the Sanhitā as uçmasī. Liiders also shows that the breaking up of the text in this way is unknown to the commentary on the Praticakhya and to that on the Ciksa, but both these commentaries take note of the summaries of the divisions given at the end of the Anuvakas, showing clearly, as Whitney b pointed out, that the actual division of the text is much later than the mere addition of these mechanical divisions. Nor is there any room for doubt that the Ciksā itself knew these additions, for in rule 196 it has the statement that the Prātiçākhya rules in another book, anarse, are optional (yadrechaya vartate), and the commentator seems right in referring this to the addenda to the Anuvakas and the Prapathakas. On the other hand, the Praticakhya in no single place, as Lüders shows, requires to be understood as referring to these addenda, and the commentator in finding a reference to them in viii. 35 is acting erroneously, as he should have referred to the Jata Patha. There is thus no earlier authority for the additions than the Ciksa, which is of uncertain date, but not later than the middle of the thirteenth century,8 and for the actual divisions than the commentary on the Sanhitā of the fourteenth century.9

On the other hand the division into Anuvakas is distinctly recognized in the Prātiçākhya, which does not indeed use the term, but recognizes their existence repeatedly. Thus in xi. 3 there are noted seventy-three sections where the a is not elided; of these seven are cited by the first words (i. 4. 44; 5.5; iii. 1. 10; 2. 8; iv. 3. 4, 11; 4. 4), six (i. 7. 7-12) by the title Vājapeya, twenty (iv. 1. 1-10; 2. 1-10) as Ukthya, five (iv. 6. 1-5) as Vikarşa, three (iv. 7. 12-14) as Vihavya, one (v. 6. 1) as Hiranyavarnīya, twenty-three (i. 1. 14; 2. 14; 3. 14; 4. 46; 5. 11; 6. 12; 7. 13; 8. 22; ii. 1. 11; 2. 12; 3. 14; 4. 14; 5. 12; 6. 11, 12; iii. 1. 11; 2. 11; 3. 11; 4. 11; 5. 11; iv. 1. 11; 2. 11; 3. 13) as Yājyās, six (iv. 4. 12; 6. 6-9; 7. 15) as Mahāpṛṣṭhyas, and two (iv. 5. 1, 10) as the first and second last of the Rudra (section). In ix. 20 the term Graha is given to i. 4. 1-42 and Prsthya to iv. 4, 12; 6, 6-9; 7, 15; v. 1, 11; 2, 11; 2, 12. In iv. 52 Isti covers ii. 2, 1-11; 3, 1-13; 4, 1-13. The whole of Kanda iv is covered by the term Agni. The Ciksa actually recognizes the terms Kanda, Praena, and Anuvāka (340), and adopts the terms used by the Prāticākhya, changing Vihavya to Havya, and Hiranyavarniya to Hiranyava in 179 for metrical reasons.1 The terms Kanda, Pracna, and Anuvaka are found freely in the commentary on the Praticakhya 2 and in the commentary on the Ciksa. The Crauta Sutras of Baudhayana, Apastamba, and the Maitrayaniya school of the Manavas recognize the division into Anuvakas in minute detail; thus Baudhāyana in addition to enumerating those of the Rudra section in x. 48, quoted by Caland,3 refers to the numbers of the Anuvakas of v. 5 in xv. 23 and to those of v. 7 in xv. 35; Apastamba repeatedly has Anuvaka, forty-seven cases being registered by Garbe,4 and has numbers e.g. in xx. 21. 9, 11; the Manava has often Anuvaka. But there is no occurrence so far as I can find of the Kanda or Pracna in these texts, and it is reasonable to assume that the only main divisions known in the Vedic period proper were divisions by subject such as those adopted by the Prāticākhya. We need not therefore assume that the curious arrangement of the present Sanhitā, in which the Acvamedha and the Yajyā sections, for example, occur scattered throughout its extent, is necessarily very old, for the evidence above adduced establishes it only for the Ciksā and later texts like the Tribhāsyaratna and the Vedataijasa, and it is found in the commentaries. The term Prapathaka used in Weber's edition is due merely to its adoption in the Bibliotheca Indica text, and Pragna is found in the Kandanukrama instead, and somewhat sporadically in the edition of Bhaskaramicra's commentary.

In the second place, the text manuscripts of the Taittiriya so far as they have been collected all omit the final word bándhuh. The omission is not early, for both the commentary on the Prātiçākhya (xviii. 1) and that on the Çikşā (341) quote the passage in full, showing that they had it before them, and even the Kaṇḍikā division assumes it, for it counts twelve words after avahat, and as the manuscripts stand there are but eleven. The word is quite essential for the sense (samudró vá áçvasya yónih samudró bándhuh), and is found in both recensions of the Çatapatha Brāhmaṇa, and its disappearance is very strange.⁵

See Lüders, op. cit. p. 47, who insists that Kända and Praçna were known to the Präticakhya, but without adducing any reason. BDS, ii. 5, 9, 14; BhärGS, iii. 8 have Kända but not Praçna, and Kända here merely means what it does in the Kändänukyama.

In the third place, there are various points in which the Sandhi followed in the manuscripts does not agree with that laid down by the Prāticākhya. Thus the Praticakhya (ix. 2) prescribes the use of Jihvamuliya and Upadhmānīya for Visarjanīya before guttural and labial sounds, and the assimilation of Visarjaniya to a sibilant. But in ix. 4 it is recorded that Agniveçya and Vālmīki did not accept Jihvāmūliya or Upadhmāniya. In v. 27 it is prescribed that m followed by a mute becomes the corresponding nasal, and in v. 28 that m followed by a semivowel becomes a nasal of similar quality. The manuscripts of North India 1 adopt as a general rule the simple expedient of keeping to Visarjaniya and Anusvara throughout; citations from the Sanhitā in the South Indian manuscripts G and M used by Whitney and those of the Ciksā used by Lüders assimilate the sibilants, and the nasals, and show traces of obedience to v. 28. The South Indian manuscripts also obey a rule laid down in the Ciksā (248) that in all the Taittiriyaveda, except the Kathaka, n after ç becomes palatal, contrary to the rule of Panini (viii. 4. 44). There is a trace of this pronunciation in i. 2. 13 l, where cnyáptre (Pada cnáptre) shows that n was pronounced ny.2 In other matters, such as the change of n before a palatal (v. 24) or l (v. 25), the insertion of k before s or s after \bar{n} (v. 26), the insertion of t before s after n (v. 27), the manuscripts vary without principle, though they do not seem in the case of the Northern manuscripts ever to insert t after t before s as required.3 They all, however, make practically + no attempt to represent the duplications and insertions and aspirations taught in xiv, but these are admittedly not suited for reproduction. They tend to adopt more or less regularly the abbreviation of a double consonant before a consonant, nt or ndh for ntt, nkt, nddh, ngdh, but this is merely in all probability a convenient graphic abbreviation.5 More important are a few points in which they agree with the Ciksā as against the Prāticākhya; thus they retain v of av and av in Sandhi before vowels against x. 19 and Ciksa, 167; they write with Bibliotheca Sanskrita edition (xii. 200) is of no critical value.

The manuscripts in Carada script from Kaçmir, on the other hand, regularly assimilate nasals and sibilants (see e.g. Scheftelowitz's edition of the Khilas of the Bgreda, and von Schroeder's edition of the Kathaka). The assimilation is carried out stoadily in the Bibliotheca Sanakrim edition, based on South Indian manuscripts.

Lüders, in saying that the manuscripts never insert it, has overlooked Whitney's statement (p. 153).

* dhūrusākau in the Sanhitā MS. E in i. 2. 8. 8 and dhūrusādam in the Brahmana, i. 1. 12. 3 are odd exceptions. It is, however, probable enough that a misread Virāma explains the whole thing: a glance at the Bibliotheca Sanskrita edition bears this out.

See Lüders, op. cit. pp. 54-57, for a discussion of the view of Benfey (Samareda, p. xlviii) and Roth (ZDMG, xlviii, 101 seq.) that this simplification is early; contra, Wackernagel, Altindische Grammatik, i. 113, 114, who overlooks Lüders's argument. The matter is not susceptible of conclusive determination.

Cikṣā, 156, no Visarga before any mute following a sibilant, while ix. 1 prescribes the omission only before a hard mute; they recognize the Kampa of a circumflexed syllable following a circumflex which the Prātiçākhya (xix. 3) gives only as the view of 'some'; they also nasalize a prolonged vowel, while in xv. 8 that is according to the natural interpretation only the view of Cankhayana and Kandamayana; moreover, with great regularity they make of Anusvara an alphabetic element, while the Praticakhya hesitates between the two views in a marked manner, but clearly inclining to the view taken in the manuscripts.2 On the other hand, the Prātiçākhya constantly follows the text in minute details such as (xiv. 8) the reading of kkh in the root khid where the manuscripts show khkh by mere carelessness, just as they read chch for cch, the editions replacing both by the correct forms. It is due to the nature of the Prāticākhya that there is apparently no mention of the rule by which after double consonants i is normally before a vowel treated as iy, and ii in a few words written uv, even after a single consonant. Similarly, there is no mention of the extraordinary fact that the words tristubh and anustubh maintain the labial only before vowel-endings and in Sandhi before hard consonants, and j, d, and dh, while in all other cases, including also some cases of p, the labials are replaced by gutturals, or that kakubh varies with kakud as a base. On the other hand, the manuscripts observe the rule that the particle u is read in Sandhi uv (ii. 3. 7. 4; iv. 3. 3. 2; 6. 9. 4) except after tát and tásmāt (vi. 1. 11. 6; vii. 5. 7. 1), which is given in ix. 16, 17.

On the whole it is impossible to doubt that the Prātiçākhya so faithfully represents even in these details the Saihitā that it would be unwise to seek in it the Prāticākhya of any but the Taittirīya school. Curiously enough Whitney was inclined to see an argument against the direct connexion of the text with that school in the fact that in xxiii. 15 the opinion of the Taittiriyas is set against that of the Ahvarakas (xxiii. 14) and the opinion given is not that of the treatise itself. This, however, is clearly, as Lüders 2 shows, unconvincing. The rule occurs in a metrical passage and in a book which Whitney himself condemns as late; moreover it is quite probable that the rule is accepted by the Prāticākhya, as the Siddhanta is opposed to that of the Ahvarakas, nor is it rare, as Whitney thought, for the author of a doctrine to be cited by name in the text-book of the school; thus the Cikeā (248), which ignores all school differences, refers to the Taittiriyaka, the Baudhāyana Crauta Sütra repeatedly cites Baudhāyana, the Brhaddevatā cites Çaunaka, as does the Rgvidhāna, the Aitareya Āranyaka mentions Mahidāsa,0 and so on. The minor points of difference between the Praticakhya and the Sanhita are adequately accounted for by the fact that the text, as the Praticakhya shows, was in minor points much discussed and altered by the schools, and the final form, which has been preserved in the manuscripts, is not fully accommodated to the views accepted by the Praticakhya in every case. What is of real importance is the proof given by the references in the Praticakhya to the great activity of the schools in dealing with the text; the names of Agnivecya, Agnivecyāyana, Atreya, Ukhya, Uttamottarīya, Kāndamāyana, Kaundinya, Kauhaliputra, Gautama, Pauskarasādi, Plāksāyaņa, Plāksi, Bādabhīkāra, Bhāradvāja, Māçākīya, Vātsapra, Vālmīki, Cānkhāyana, Caityāyana, Sāmkṛtya, and Hārīta are recorded,7 and the schools of the Mīmānsakas, Ahvārakas, and Taittirīyas. Moreover the Prātiçākhya, in its final form, recognizes, beside the Pada, also the Krama and the Jata texts, which are additional proofs of the eagerness of the schools to preserve the text intact.

The Date of the Prātiçākhya. The practical certainty that the Prātiçākhya accepts as a whole the text of the Sanhitā renders its date a matter of importance. It is admittedly one of the best works of its class, being free from the artificial obscurity and laboured feebleness of the Vājasaneyi Prātiçākhya and from the intrusion of general grammar seen in the Atharva Prātiçākhya.⁸ There is no ground for doubting the view ⁹ taken by Weber, Roth, and others, that these texts so far as this Prāticākhya at any rate is concerned are older than Pānini; the objections to the priority of the Praticakhyas adduced by Goldstücker and Haug which have lead Wackernagel1 to lend his authority to the view that Pāṇini used an earlier form of the Prāticākhyas cannot be considered as substantial. Panini admittedly cannot and does not in his work master the material presented in the Praticakhyas,2 but the task was clearly beyond any one's power, and this Prāticākhya shows no trace of Pāninean doctrines as would be natural if it had come to existence after that work. Of course it recognizes the existence of grammar.3 but not in the wholesale manner of the Atharva Praticakhya, and grammar equally had a very long history before Panini. In i. 57 lopa is defined as vināça, not as in Panini (i. 1.60) by adarcana; it is characteristic that the Ciksa, admittedly post-Paninean, has adarçana (10). In x. 14; xi. 1 the loss of a after e or o is ascribed to a disappearance of a, but Pāṇini (vi. 1. 109) ascribes it to a blending, and so does the Ciksa (177, 178), in this case agreeing with the other Prātiçākhyas. In v. 7 pratyaya is used of the augment, but, as Whitney points out, not necessarily in the technical sense. In xiii. 9 pravāda denotes, as in the Rgveda Prāticākhya, an inflexional or derivative form, a use not Paninean. In xiii. 15 there is an isolated and unfortunate allusion to the grammatical loss of a in vrtraghnah without the lingualizing of the n. In xvi. 25 the term samkhyasu seems to mean 'in numerals', though the commentary believes that su means the locative case. There is no trace of the use of the Paninean abbreviations, and not the slightest hint of influence of the Paninean method, though both, in principle at least, must have been in existence long before Panini. We are therefore bound to conclude that it is only reasonable to believe that the Praticakhyas which Yaska 5

² He is sometimes fuller, sometimes less full. The former fact points much more strongly to a later date than the former to an earlier date, since it is easy to see that Panini could omit, less easy to see why the Pratical August should be deficient.

Nirikia, i. 17: padaprakṛāni sarvacarandnām pārṣadāni, a clear reference to the view in Raveda Prāticākhya, ii. 1, and in accordance with Whitney's rendering of prakṛti in the Taittiriya, v. 2. Lūders (op.cit. p. 37, n. 2) denies any reference there to the Pada, but the Çūṇā (27) which he quotes has a reference though a less direct one: prakṛti is padavat sanhāta yabra na kāryam sanhātani yadi. Whitney's view is, therefore, still in point. The Taittiriya does not normally give any rules for construction of the Pada; cf. Lūders, p. 38.

appears to have known included the Taittirīya. The possibility of minor additions of course is not disputed, but these would not so far as the Taittirīya is concerned affect in any way its proof that the whole Sankitā was in existence before it was composed, or that a Pada text existed. The date thus given is of course still undecided, but as will be seen below it is most probable that Pāṇini must be placed not after 300 g.c., nor Yāska after 400 g.c., and a century earlier is more probable as the date of the latter. This would give a later limit of about 600 g.c. for the Sanhitā on the ground of the evidence of the technical literature.

§ 3. THE SANHITĀ AND THE ÇRAUTA SŪTRAS.

There is no Crauta Sūtra extant which gives an account of the ritual exactly as it is presupposed by the text of the Sanhita. But there are two texts, the Apastamba 3 and the Baudhayana, 4 which follow it as their main source, and of which practically complete texts are available. Besides these there are known the Sütras of Bharadvaja, Hiranyakecin, and the Vaikhanasa which all follow the Taittiriya school, and portions of which have been made known by Hillebrandt in Das altindische Neu- und Vollmondsopfer (1879), and by Schwab in Das altindische Thieropfer (1886).5 The first two are also referred to, though the text is not printed, in Caland and Henry's L'Agnistoma (1906, 1907), but the editors considered, doubtless correctly, that it was needless to consult the Vaikhanasa. Less closely related is the Manava Crauta Sūtra, the Sūtra of the Maitrāyanī Sanhitā, and the Kātyāyana Crauta Sūtra, the Sūtra of the Vājasaneyi Sankitā. Of the Sūtras of the Taittirīya school, that of Baudhāyana occupies a quite special place; it is true that it is ready to supplement the Sanhitā in many important particulars, as for example in the full description of the game of dice in the upavasathagavi rite, the papmano vinidhayah Mantras, the concluding part of the animal sacrifice, the rules for the date of the Caturmasya rites, the dialogue with a Vaicya when the clay for the fire-pan is obtained, the handing over of the consecration vessel and the bow to a courtier at the Rajasuya, the questioning as to descent at the Daçapeya, the description of the requisites for the Açvamedha, the full accounts of the Savas, the lists of the Pravaras, many astronomical data, and a long list of various opinions given in the Dvaidhasūtra. But on the other hand it closely agrees with the Sanhitā in other points; it adopts its readings of verses however strange with absolute fidelity; it has a whole section (xiv) to match the Aupānuvākya section (iii) of the Sanhitā; it treats the various Ahīnas and Sattras of the seventh book of the Sanhitā with scrupulous exactness in xvi, whereas Apastamba follows the Pañcavinca Brāhmana in preference.

The Āpastamba Çrauta Sūtra, on the other hand, agrees closely with he Bhāradvāja and the Hiranyakeçi, and seemingly also with the unimportant Vaikhānasa. As compared with the Baudhāyana, these texts are emphatically of the Sūtra style; the elaboration of the Baudhāyana is foreign to their brief directions. The Baudhāyana repeatedly quotes verses found in the Sanhitā in full, though it clearly took them from the Sanhitā.¹ Āpastamba, on the other hand, only quotes in full texts from other sources, and the other Sūtras seem to follow the same plan. Moreover, in Āpastamba the use of the Maitrāyanī Sanhitā is very marked² and shows that the ritual has a distinct tendency to eclecticism, just as in the Sattras the text follows the Pañcaviñça Brāhmaṇa³ rather than the Taittirīya Sanhitā. Moreover the Rgveda⁴ and the Atharvaveda⁵ have yielded material to Āpastamba, and the Vājasaneyi is often cited. There is clear proof that Āpastamba followed the Mānava Çrauta Sūtra,⁶ and used the Kāṭhaka-Kapiṣṭhala.

Now it is perfectly certain that the Baudhāyana and the Āpastamba Sūtras had before them the text of the Sanhitā as we now know it. The actual references will be found in the notes to the several Anuvākas, and in the cases where the one text has nothing the other supplies the deficit. As already mentioned, both recognize the Anuvāka divisions of the present text, but neither has any reference to the Kāṇḍas or Praçnas by name. But the Baudhāyana Gṛḥya Sūtra has preserved an interesting notice as to the study of the text of the Veda. It extends, according to ii. 1, over five periods, each commenced and ended by a vow, the Hotāraḥ, Çukriya, Upaniṣad, Godāna, and Aṣṭācatvāriṅṣad Vratas. The list is as follows, and should be compared with that of the Kāṇḍānukrama, the numbers according to that text being appended:

This list, of course, ignores the present make-up of the Sanhitā, and in its own composition the text of the Sūtra shows such divergences that it is only fair to conclude that the matter was arranged by subjects, not by books as now, both in the Sanhitā and the earliest Sūtra works. There is also, as seen above, no clear trace in Āpastamba or the other Sūtras so far as they are known of the arrangement of the Sanhitā in its present form, i.e. in seven Kāṇḍas and Pragnas.

As regards the arrangement within the limits of the Anuvākas themselves the Sūtras not rarely use verses in other than the order of the text. But this cannot be alleged in any case as a ground for a change of the text from its original form. In the first place the Sūtras frequently disagree as to the order of the use of the verses, one accepting the text, the other not, while secondly it is impossible to ignore the fact that the Sūtras cannot be held to contain a traditional ritual representing precisely the Sankitā, as their great differences show.

The general rule of recognition of the Sanhitā is not without one or two apparent exceptions of some importance. In the Sanhitä, iv. 6. 4, occurs a hymn of fifteen verses, corresponding to Raveda, vii. 103. 1-9, 11, 10, 13; vi. 75, 16, 18, 17. The parallel passages in the Kāthaka (xviii, 5) and the Maitrayani (ii. 10, 4) have but ten verses corresponding to the first ten here; the Vājasaneyi (xvii. 33-49) has seventeen, adding to the thirteen of the Rgveda a fourteenth, which is not recognized in the Vedic text, and the three verses of the hymn, vi. 75. Now the Brahmana portion of the Sanhitā (v. 4. 6. 4) says expressly daçarcám bhavati, thus reducing the hymn to the dimensions of the Kathaka and Maitrayani texts: the Kāthaka (xxi. 10) likewise says daçarcám bhavati. Similarly, the Apastamba Crauta Sūtra (xvii. 14. 7) has daçarcena and the Baudhāyana (x. 51) quotes the Brahmana. It would, however, be an error to assume that the Sütra knew a Sanhitā where the text ended with the tenth verse of iv. 6.4. For both the ritual of the Brahmana is decisive, and Baudhayana emphasizes this by the reference to the Brahmana passage. It is of importance to note that the Prāticākhya clearly read the full passage. In iii. 10 jayatā and avatā are given for their forms in ā; of these forms the latter occurs in iv. 6. 4 k,1 and the former in iv. 6. 4 m. In xvi. 26 samçitā is cited, and the only reference must be to bráhma-samcitā in iv. 6. 4 n. These two cases are conclusive, for they rest not on the commentator's identifications but on necessary references, and what appeared in the text at the time of the Praticakhya was probably there at the time of the composition of the Sūtras.

In another passage of the Sanhitā (v. 6. 21) Caland a has suggested the existence of a small omission from the text as given to us. In one of his manuscripts (M) of the Baudhayana Crauta Sutra (xv. 23) in place of the reading dvandvinah describing the victims enumerated in v. 6. 21 there is read caturvimeatim pacun, and this number agrees with the notice below that there are sixty animals tied to the Agnistha post, whereas the present text gives but twenty-two in v. 6. 21, which with 3+11+11+11 makes up only fifty-eight. The number should therefore be twenty-four, but though a pair could easily have been omitted in the list in v. 6. 21 we cannot on the strength of this possibility and the Sütra feel any confidence that sixty is more than a round number. Nothing turns in fact upon it.

The fact of the general agreement of the Sanhitā with the Sutras lends importance to the question of their date. The tradition of the schools shows that of the Sütrakāras of the Taittirīya the order of age is Baudhāyana, Bhāradvāja, Āpastamba, Satyāṣāḍha Hiranyakeçin, and then the Vaikhanasa. This is shown for the Dharma Sutras of the first, third, and fourth authors by Bühler;3 for the Grhya Sūtras of all four by Winternitz,4 and Garbe accepts it for the Crauta Sutras also, a decision which, as regards Baudhayana, is confirmed by Caland,6 and which, so far as the portions of text of Bharadvaja and Hiranyakeçin published by Hillebrandt and Schwab are concerned, is, I think, clearly in accordance with fact. For the date of Apastamba we have the conjecture of Bühler 7 that he must be placed not later than the third century B.C., which he bases on the fact that Apastamba does not regard the normal rules of grammar as laid down by Panini, a fact abundantly illustrated also by Garbe 8 and Winternitz, 9 and therefore cannot have lived when Panini had become the norm of speech, and that he mentions in his Dharma Sūtra Cvetaketu, of fame in the Catapatha Brāhmana, as a person of then modern date. Indeed, Bühler desires to put him 150-200 years earlier.

Also in iv. 2. 6 i, but the reference is, no doubt, to both passages.

This I consider improbable; that the argument from language is of some weight is undeniable, but it does not carry Apastamba beyond say 300 or 350 g.c., and it is probable that the Apastamba Grauta Sūtra borrows from the Açvalāyana Grauta Sūtra and even the Gānkhāyana Grauta Sūtra, which I have dated about 400 g.c., and a little later. But the Baudhāyana is doubtless a good deal older, as its Brāhmana style in the Uttaratuti and its frequent use of archaic forms show. Moreover, the Mānava which is used by Apastamba is likewise in the more Brāhmana form of the Baudhāyana. Garbe has called the Mānava the oldest of the Sūtras, but that was before the text of the Baudhāyana was known, and in point of fact there is no special ground for distinction. It is probable that the fifth century g.c. is the best date for the Baudhāyana; Caland suggests the sixth, and the Sanhitā is carried back for us to some period not at any rate later than the sixth century g.c.

§ 5. THE SEVERAL PARTS OF THE SANHITA.

The comparison of the texts shows clearly that the main constituents of the text are the following:-the new and full moon sacrifice (i. 1); the Soma offering (i. 2-4); the Agni ritual, viz. the Punaradheya (i. 5) and the Upasthana (i, 5); the verses and Brahmana for the sacrificer at Istis (i. 6. 1-7. 6); the Vājapeya (i. 7. 7-12); the Rājasūya (i. 8. 1-21) including the Caturmasya rites; the optional forms of animal and Isti sacrifices (ii. 1-4); the Brahmana of the verses for the Hotr and Brahman at the new and full moon rites (ii. 5, 6); the fire ritual (Mantra in iv, Brahmana in v), and the Brahmana of the Soma ritual (vi. 1. 1-vii. 1. 3). To these must be added from the Brahmana the Mantras for the new and full moon rites contained in iii. 5; the Mantra and Brahmana for the Adhana (i. 1.7; 2.1; 2-6, 8-10), the Brāhmana for the Vājapeya (i. 3. 2-9), the Brāhmana for the Rajasuya (i. 6, 1-8, 10), and the Brahmana for the section TS. i. 1 (iii. 2 and 3), giving a fairly complete Sanhita, and one which must be regarded as being in effect the basis of the Sanhita of the Black Yajurveda. The Taittiriya differs, however, from the other texts in placing the Kamyah Pacavah before the Kāmyā Istayah, but it agrees with them in having the Brāhmana of the fire ritual immediately before that of the Soma ritual. This is a point in which the White Yajurveda differs, for it first deals with the new and full moon sacrifices (Catapatha, i), then with the ordinary fire ritual (ii), and then with the Soma sacrifice (iii and iv); after that the piling of the fire occupies v-ix, with an appendix on its mystic significance in x.

Of the other content of the Sanhitā, in the first place, the Acvamedha verses and formulae have the peculiarity that in the Kathaka they are placed in a separate book (v) and agree very nearly textually. The only sections not so separated are those corresponding to the Yajyanuvakyas in iv. 4. 12 and 7. 15. In the Maitrayani, on the other hand, the Acvamedha Mantras are all congregated in iii. 12-16, which contains most of the matter in TS. iv. 4. 12 (= iii. 16. 4); 7. 15 (= iii. 16. 5); iv. 6. 6, 8-9 (= iii. 16. 3, 1); v. 1. 11 (= iii, 16, 2); 2, 11 (= iii, 12, 21); v, 5, 11-24 (= iii, 14); v, 6, 11-23 (= iii. 13); v. 7. 11-26 (= iii. 15); vii. 1. 11-20 (= iii. 12); vii. 4. 12-22 (scattered in iii. 12 and 13), and part of vii. 5, 12-25 (scattered in iii. 12, 13, and 15). The treatment of the matter in the Taittiriya must be regarded as artificial and unnatural, and we have no authority for its curious arrangement even in the Kandanukrama which indeed enumerates the parts of the Acvamedha in a manner which indicates a desire to make precise what is intended, but which does not hint that they were then scattered throughout the text. But the peculiar character of the Acvamedha is made further prominent by its having no Brāhmana in the Sanhitās, and in the Vājasaneyi it occupies books xxii-xxv, a portion admittedly an addition to the original form of the Sanhitā. In the Maitrāyanī also the Açvamedha section is an addendum following a form of the Sautrămani which has not found its way into the Taittiriya Sanhita. The Catapatha in xii provides a Brāhmana, parallel with Taittirīya Brāhmana, iii. 8 and 9, and the rite must beyond doubt be considered as one which was not a part of the ordinary tradition and was later introduced, the Mantras being forced into the Taittiriya and Maitrayani texts, but in the Kathaka being relegated to a special book. The practical identity of the Kathaka and Taittiriya versions confirms this appearance of incorporation or addition ab extra, and the two odd short Brahmana pieces found in the Sanhitā, v. 3. 12 and 4. 12 have close parallels in the Catapatha Brāhmana, while the Maitrayans agrees in its Mantras very closely with the Vajasaneyi as against the Taittiriya. We must therefore assume that the horse sacrifice emanated from a special section of priestly activities, and in special from the Purohitas, who would naturally pay attention to the rites connected with the royal power of which they were par excellence the guardians.1

· Secondly, the Yājyānuvākyās present the same curious features of dispersal, being found at the end of the various Anuvakas. Those in i, 1, 11; 2. 14; 3. 14; 4. 46; 5. 11; 6. 12; 7. 13; 8. 22; ii. 1. 11; 2. 12; 3. 14; 4. 14; 5. 12; 6. 11; iii. 1. 11; and part of 3. 11 are the verses for the optional sacrifices in Sanhitā, ii. Part of iii. 3. 11 belongs to the Devikāhavīnsi of iii. 4. 9, and iii. 4. 11 gave the verses for i. 8. 10. In ii. 6. 12 are given the verses for the Hotr at the oblations of the Pitryajña. In iii, 5, 11 there are Mantras for the Hotr at the animal sacrifice, which form a supplement to the Brahmana, iii. 6. The sections of iv (1.11; 2.11; 3,13) give the verses for the three four-monthly sacrifices, and iv. 4. 12 and 7. 15 give verses for the Acvamedha, and therefore have been considered under that head along with v. 1. 11; 2. 11. 12; 3. 12; and 4. 12. In the Kāthaka the fourth book according to the Arsadhyaya consists of the last Anuvakas of the several books, viz. xl. 14; ii. 14. 15; iv. 15, 16; vi. 10, 11; vii. 16, 17; viii. 16, 17; ix. 18, 19; x. 12, 13; xi. 12, 13; xii. 14, 15; xiii. 15, 16; xv. 12, 13; xvi. 20, 21; xvii. 18, 19; xviii. 20, 21; xix. 13, 14; xx. 15; xxi. 13, 14; xxii. 14, 15; xxiv. 11, 12; xxvi. 11. In the Maitrayani the term is applied to iv. 10-14. Essentially, of course, the verses are not for the Adhvaryu at all, but for the Hotr, and so are, with very few exceptions, taken practically without change from the Raveda, in striking contrast to the cases of other verses which occur in the Rgveda and the Yajurveda Sanhitās and which more often show variants than not from the Rgvedic tradition. Nor can there be any doubt that the collation of such verses is not early, but belongs to the last period of redaction of the Sanhitā, though why exactly they were placed as they now are is not obvious.

Little weight, however, can be assigned to Weber's argument that the text itself in the matter of its treatment of repeated verses shows consciousness of the later character of these sections. It is true that as a rule, as is implied in the Pratical khya (i. 61), the text repeats each verse in full (e.g. iv. 1. 10 n = iv. 6.5 f = iv. 7.12 h), and that in the case of the Yājyānuvākyā sections the verses are frequently, though by no means invariably, in the MSS, and in the Kandikā counting reduced to the Pratīkas only. The rule has too many exceptions to be relied on: thus i. 4. 45 l is repeated in full in i. 4. 46 f; iv. 2. 11 l is repeated in full from ii. 1. 11 l, and iv. 2. 11 l from iv. 2. 11 l is repeated in iv. 3. 13 l and iii. 1. 11 l in iv. 3. 13 l. It is probable that the whole thing must be set down to no more than the accidents of the tradition in dealing with well-known Rgvedic verses. At any rate it will be found impracticable to formulate any tolerable theory of the variations of treatment.

A more substantial argument for the secondary character of the verses is the fact that they so often contain vikalpitā verses, showing that they were chosen to fit a text, not commented on by a text following a collection. Moreover, as Weber² points out, in some cases the Yājyānuvākyās supplement texts in themselves wholly or nearly complete; thus in ii. 4. 7 and 8 occur Mantras, followed by a Brāhmaṇa in ii. 4. 9 and 10, and then further Yājyānuvākyās are given in iii. 1. 11. 4-7. Or again, ii. 4. 5, Mantra, is explained in ii. 4. 6, while Yājyānuvākyās are given in iii. 1. 11. 1-4. Similar instances are ii. 3. 10 (Mantra), 11 (Iṣṭi), 5. 12. 1 (Yājyānuvākyā), and ii. 3. 9 (Mantra and Iṣṭi) with ii. 4. 14. 5.

A third large passage of probably the later stratum of the text is the part of the new and full moon ritual relating to the Hotr and the Brahman priests (ii. 5, 1-11; 6, 1-10); the parallel to this is not at all full in the other Black Yajurveda texts, and the Mantras are only given in the Taittirīya Brāhmana, iii. 5.

Fourthly, the whole of Kāṇḍā iii is certainly late; it is frankly called Upānuvākya or Aupānuvākya in the Kāṇḍānukrama. It has in accord with this a whole chapter, the Aupānuvākya (xiv), of the Baudhāyana Crauta Sūtra devoted to it, and it admittedly from beginning to end consists of mingled Mantra and Brāhmaṇa, supplementing the account of the Soma sacrifice, the new and full moon sacrifices, the Agnihotra, the animal sacrifice, and the Agnicayana, the bulk being devoted to a supplement of the Soma ritual. Part of its material, but only a small part, finds its place in the ritual of the other two texts, and the mixture of Mantra and Brāhmaṇa is quite opposed to the sharp distinction between the two elements in the fire piling (iv and v) or the Soma ritual (i. 2-4), and is reasonably to be considered as showing that the part concerned is less primitive.

In book v the treatment of the fire-piling ritual is divided by the Kandanukrama into two Kandas, and the second of these is called the Agnyupānuvākya (v. 5. 1-10; 6. 1-10; 7. 1-10). It is interlaced in the text with part of the Açvamedha, just as the first Kanda is followed at the end of each Prapathaka by a section of the Acvamedha. The title is most abundantly proved to be correct by the contents. Thus v. 5. 1 refers to the victims at the Agnicayana in a way supplementing v. 1. 8. 2, 3: that section contemplates the offering of a he-goat for Prajapati, but in v. 5. 1 the offering of a he-goat is allotted on consideration to Vayu and a cake is assigned to Prajāpati.2 In v. 5. 2 the first paragraph is a precise parallel to Taittiriya Brāhmana, iii. 9. 8. 1, and the fourth paragraph comments in detail on the Mantras in iv. 2. 9 a and b, which are not treated at length in the Brahmana on that passage in v. 2. 8. In v. 5. 3, iv. 2. 9 q and r are similarly treated. In v. 5. 4 details are given of the Retahsic and other bricks, omitted in the original Brahmana, including new Mantras. In v. 5. 5 the gold bricks and naturally perforated bricks are similarly treated. In v. 5. 6 the day-form bricks receive similar notice. In v. 5. 7. 1 the direction is given that there should be only one sacrificial post, which is contrary to the number eleven elsewhere, even in the Upānuvākya (v. 6.8.2 and v. 6. 4). In v. 5. 8 is given the adoration of the fire altar with the several Samans. In. v. 5. 10. 4, 5 the sentence about the gods as eaters of the oblations and as non-eaters is a parallel to v. 4. 5. 1, 2. In v. 6. 1 are given new bricks, the pot bricks, with their Mantras, and in v. 6, 2 the Brāhmana. In v. 6, 3 the Bhūtestakās are mentioned, and the connexion of the Rajasuya and the Sautramani with the Agnicayana is adumbrated. In v. 6. 4 is found a legend of Prajapati's creation of the five quarters by the building of the fire, and with it should be compared v. 7. 5 and v. 6. 10.

contains a mediation between the view, which it supports, of Vayu as the recipient of the offer and that of v. 1. S of Prajapati.

See Oldenberg, Prolegomena, pp. 290 seq.
 Eggeling (SBE. xxxv. xxxix) does not recognize the distinction between the two passages, but it is clear that v. 5. 1. 4

also containing legends of the cosmic action of Prajapati in connexion with the fire altar and its five layers. In v. 6.5 occurs the mention of four kings or priests of old who piled the fire, but who are mentioned in a way unparalleled in the rest of the Saihitā, though the passage recurs in the Kāthaka, xxii. 3. v. 6. 6 is a series of supplements to v. 4. 4. 4; 2, 9. 2; 5. 2. 2; 4. 7. 6; 2. 3. 7, and it disagrees with v. 4. 4. 4 by ordering the same treatment of the two shoes, instead of the wearing of one only as decided in the former passage: it also comments on verses given in the Brāhmana, i. 5. 8. 1. In v. 6. 7 the length of the Diksā is given. In v. 6. 8 there are comments on subjects dealt with in v. 4. 4. 5 and 5. 5. 1; moreover, in v. 6. 8. 4, 5 the use of two Mantras only is prescribed for the Retahsic bricks, while the Mantra section (iv. 2.9 p) gives three. v. 6.9 covers ground already touched on in v. 2. 1. 5; 1. 10. 5; 2. 9. 1; 8. 7. In v. 7. 1 and v. 7. 10 references are made to the verses used in the Naciketa Cayana (Taittirīya Brāhmana, iii. 11. 6. 3), and in v. 7. 1 reference is made to topics dealt with in v. 2, 10, 1 and v. 2, 6, 1, v. 7, 2 gives verses for new kinds of bricks and refers to the Agrayana (cf. Taittirīya Brāhmana, i, 6, 1, 9). In v. 7, 3 is repeated without the iti of quotation as normally in Brāhmana passages the Mantra, iv. 7. 1 a. v. 7. 4 supplements v. 5. 4. 3 and explains iv. 4. 4. 7; 6. 5. 5, besides adding a new set of verses for the Rästrabhrt bricks. In v. 7. 5 Prajāpati has doublets in Viçvakarman and Paramesthin. v. 7. 6 supplements v. 2. 6. 1; 8. 1; 4. 9. 1; 2. 6. 1; the rules as to abstinence from sexual relations given in v. 7, 6, 5 are more stringent and less detailed than those in v. 6. 8. 3. The verses in v. 7. 7 are a supplement to iv. 7. 14. v. 7. 8 supplements v. 2. 8. 1 and v. 2. 6. 1. In v. 7. 9 the omission of the verses for the taking of the fire in oneself is made good, and in paragraph 5 the Nāciketa Cayana verses are again mentioned. In v. 7. 10 the modes of arranging the heads for magical purposes are given; this section assumes that all the victims are slain, rather against v. 1. 8. 3, but in accord with v. 2. 9. 3, 4, to which this passage is a supplement.

It may not be without interest to note that the metaphor of the waking of a sleeping tiger found in v. 4. 10. 5 has a parallel in the comparison with the attitude of a tiger in anger in v. 5. 7. 4, and there is another from the horse in v. 5. 10. 7. It is curious that çak with a negative there takes an infinitive in tum in v. 5. 2. 1; 3. 2; and 5. 4. In v. 5. 1. 6 the sequence of y6...cinuté tādig evá tád ártim ārchet is rather careless. In çyeti akuruta in v. 5. 8. 1 the i is an extension of the use seen in mustī and mithunī in other parts of the text; 1 possibly thus is to be explained āsandt sādayati in v. 6. 9. 1, but the $\bar{v}$ is not there treated in the Pada as pragrhya. The use of gáptih and maitrāvarunátām in v. 7. 6. 5 are both rare and the latter is curious. In v. 5. 1. 2 there is an apparent borrowing from ii. 2. 1. 5.

Sixthly, the Sattrayana (vii. 1. 4-10; 2. 1-10; 3. 1-10; 4. 1-11; 5. 1-10) has for the most part no parallel in the other Yajurveda texts; only the Gavam Ayana sections (vii. 2. 7-10; 5. 1-10) are found also in the Kāṭhaka, and the Sattras must be deemed to be a special development of the ritual. The section has on the other hand very close relations with the Pancavinca Brāhmana.

Even in the parts of the text that are not open to suspicion of later addition there has been in the process of the formation of the Sanhitā a certain amount of variation; thus portions of the fire-piling ritual and the Açvamedha have forced themselves into i. 4. 32–34 and 35 and 36 respectively. In i. 7 there has crept in a single Anuvāka (i. 7. 2) which belongs to the Dārçya Hautra, and not to the ritual of the sacrificer at Iştis; it is curiously enough strikingly marked out from its surroundings by its use of the perfect in narration eleven times in the form uvāca; one imperfect occurs in the same clause, avadatām, but it is clearly differentiated in sense, for it means 'the two (sages) were conversing (about the cow)' while the uvāca gives the dicta of the sages. In the rest of i there are 96 imperfects and no narrative perfects.

This criterion warns us against accepting as a principle the view that the actual age of the several portions of the Brāhmaṇa is different. Eggeling ² has pointed out in the case of the Catapatha that this is not a safe inference from difference of time of redaction. Thus TS, iii, which is certainly a supplement, contains no narrative perfects to 120 imperfects; vii, also later in its place, has to 311 imperfects only 2 narrative perfects, viz. uvāca in vii. 4. 5. 4; 5. 4. 2, in each case contrasted with an imperfect of narrative and approximating to a present such as is often found, because the dictum still holds good. In ii there is one uvāca, ii. 6. 2. 3, to 560 imperfects; in v. 6 perfects (uvāca in v. 4. 2. 2; 6. 6. 3; iyāya, v. 1. 8. 2; 2. 3. 1; 3. 2. 4; vidām cakāra, v. 3. 8. 1) are found compared with 338 imperfects; those in iyāya, however, are not really narrative at all, but represent an abiding condition (Yama's overlordship, the position of the Bṛhatī metre), and

See my note, JRAS, 1912, p. 724. Anroib, vii. 3. 1. 3, seems more clearly a case of a mere imperfect; but cf. Delbrück, Altind. Synt. pp. 298-300; Vergl. Synt. ii. 272.

vidām cakāra expresses the permanent teaching as compared with the result to the teacher, given by an imperfect. In vi these are 472 imperfects and 7 perfects; uvāca occurs at vi. 4. 5. 2; in vi. 1. 6. 4 iyāya seems really a present; tatāna in vi. 1. 11. 3 is repeated from the Mantra and is really present; in vi. 6. 2. 2, 3 papracha and uvāca twice occur, but babhūvuḥ is really a present 1 and is different in sense from āsīt in pratiṣthāpya āsīt.2

In other respects the language of the Brahmana portions show a constant similarity; I can find no traces of such differences as are plainly obvious in the case of the Yājñavalkya and Cāndilya books of the Catapatha Brāhmana.3 The same phrases and forms recur in different parts of the book; thus ajakşīrá is found in ii. 2. 4. 4; v. 4. 3. 2; váva in ii. 5. 11. 8; vi. 4. 5. 2; kásmät satyát in ii. 6. 3. 1; vi. 4. 5. 7; tásmäd aksnayá pacávó 'ngāni prá haranti in v. 2. 10. 5; vi. 3. 10. 6; with ādityébhyah kámāyálabhanta, ii. 1. 2. 3, may be compared agnáye médhāyālabhanta, vi. 3. 5. 1; the phrase a vrccyate with the dative is found passim (iii. 1. 6. 1; 2. 8. 4; 3. 3. 1; 5. 9. 1; v. 1. 7. 1; 5. 7. 2; vi. 1. 4. 9, &c.); the curious use of one noun with ca with a dual verb, the other being supplied from the context, appears in ii. 4. 4. 1, 2; v. 2, 8, 2; the nominative with rūpám krtvá is found in v. 2. 6. 5; vi. 1, 3. 1; 6. 5; 2. 4, 2, 4; 7. 1; vii. 1. 6. 2, 3, 4; dakşinā adverbially appears in v. 2, 10, 5; vi. 1, 1, 1; 5, 2; mithuni evá téna karoti, iii. 4. 9. 1, is paralleled by mithuni bhávantih, v. 3. 6. 3; mithuni bhavatah, vi. 5. 8. 6; the rare tājāk occurs in ii. 1. 5. 7; 2. 2. 3, &c.; iii. 2. 3. 4; v. 4. 5. 5; vi. 4. 6. 4; 5. 6. 5. The moods and the tenses appear in precisely the same uses throughout; the subjunctive in all cases is restricted to sentences in reported narrative, such as jäyātai, fdhyātai, asat, bhavāt, vi. 5. 6. 2; ádat, upadhiyántai, védat, v. 2, 10. 3; skándāt, asat, ii. 6. 6. 2; repeated verbatím in vi. 2. 8. 5; samcinávat, rdhnávat, v. 5. 2. 1; juhavan, ii. 5. 11. 5; ucyāntai, grhyāntai, vi. 4. 7. 1; asan, 2; grhyātai, 3; 8. 3; crinan (crinan in MSS.), vi. 4. 8, 1; the optative use in sá tvaí yajeta yó yajňásyártya vásiyant syát, ii. 6. 6. 3, has a parallel in vi. 4. 3. 1, sá tvá adhvaryúh syād yáh sómam upāvahárant sárvābhyo devátābhya upāvaháret. The agrist has its regular sense throughout, and it occurs occasionally throughout in its sense of a present, as in akar, iii. 4. 10. 4; v. 2. 8. 7; ahvata, v. 5. 6. 1; apat, vii. 5. 8. 2. In fact, the language is on the whole of a consistent texture throughout, the chief cases of unusual uses being found in the Agnyupānuvākya (v. 5-7). Moreover, in the Taittirīya Brāhmana the same forms are of common occurrence, and for the most part there can be no question of later or earlier date in the composition of the Brāhmaṇa portions. If the Kāṭhaka portion (iii. 10-12) is omitted, there are only 25 perfects in narrative to 1426 imperfects, and of these six are found (with 26 imperfects) in one section, i. 5. 9, eight in ii. 3. 10 (following 3 imperfects), and the others are scattered in i. 5. 2. 1; ii. 2. 7. 3; 11. 5 (there two cases of first plural intended for distinction from the imperfects); 7. 18. 3 (introductory to a narrative); iii. 2. 9. 15; 5. 4; 6. 1; 8. 6. 5; 9. 15. 3. Moreover, in ii. 2. 11. 1 seq. the instrumental singular práyukti occurs, a form to which no parallel exists in the Brāhmaṇa portions of the Saṅhitā; it is, however, a form which occurs in the Rgveda.¹ It is improbable therefore that the prose parts of the Saṅhitā differ greatly in date.

The Mantras and the Brāhmaṇa of the Sanhitā show in general the closest and most intimate relations, pointing to the dependence of the latter on the former. The Brāhmaṇa portion of the text does not attempt to deal in full with every verse of the Sanhitā. Only what is of importance or of interest from a theological point of view attracts attention, and, as the supplement to the fire-piling ritual shows, the points dealt with could easily be increased indefinitely. It is impossible then to seek to show that the whole of the Mantras of the Sanhitā were before the framers of the Brāhmaṇa, and recourse must be had to the negative argument, that no portion of the text can be shown to be deliberately ignored in the Brāhmaṇa.

To this general correspondence of Mantra and Brāhmaṇa there appears to be only one considerable exception or apparent exception, which has been mentioned above.² In v. 4. 6. 4 the sacrificer is described as repeating the Apratiratha hymn and it is said daçarcám bhavati. The hymn is RV. x. 103 as presented in iv. 6. 4, where in all twelve verses are given from it, ver. 12 being omitted; in the Atharvaveda (xix. 13) it has eleven verses, the first verse being new, and the rest representing in different order RV. x. 103. 1-11, ver. 10 being omitted. The Maitrāyaṇī (ii. 10. 4) has ten verses, omitting ver. 10; the Kāṭhaka (xviii. 5) also has ten verses, omitting ver. 10, and the first ten verses in iv. 6. 4 omit ver. 11 which follows, being itself followed by ver. 13 and then by RV. vi. 75. 16, 18, 17. The Vājasaneyi extends the number to seventeen by including the whole of x. 103 and a supplementary verse and the three verses of vi. 75. The Catapatha, on the other hand, in ix. 2. 3. 6 refers to twelve verses as the Apratiratha. The Kāthaka (xxi. 10) recognizes a ten-verse hymn, and the Maitrāyaṇī (iii. 3. 7) says dácānvāha.

Now are we in such a case to assume that the Brahmana had before it a text of the Sanhitā to which these verses had not yet been added? The Sūtras of Apastamba and Baudhāyana likewise prescribe ten verses, but this is of no moment, as they simply follow the Brahmana. On the other hand, as we have seen above, the Prāticākhya twice (iii. 10; xvi. 26) expressly cites from two of the added verses. The Katyayana Crauta Sūtra (xi. 1. 9) refers to the use of twelve verses of the Apratiratha hymn, showing that it knew the full text of seventeen verses (Vājasaneyi, xvii. 33-49). The verses in both the cases of the Vājasaneyi and the Taittiriya must, we are to assume, have been added after the composition of the Brahmana section. Any conclusion must be conjectural, but it must be noted that the explanation could equally be given that the Brahmana adopts a ritual slightly different from that of the Sanhitā. The point of difference is indeed very slight, for it is merely the use of a few extra verses which are taken from the Rgveda and not a question of an integral part of the ritual text. The genuineness of the extra verses as once actually used in a Taittiriya school is confirmed by the use in the Vājasaneyi where, however, there are used two additional verses, one of which is not properly Rgvedic.1

The Sanhitā, it should be noted, does not contain the Mantras in every case in the order of their use in the ritual. Thus in iv. 4. 5 the Mantras c-e accompany each the placing of a brick in a different layer; so in iv. 4. 6 a-c accompany the putting of the Viçvajyotis bricks in three successive layers, and so in iv. 4. 6 e-h for the Sanyānī bricks. Similarly with the Rtavyā bricks in iv. 4. 11 a-b, or with the Mantra (i. 1. 7 k) for the breaking up of the potsherds in the Purodāça rite. But in these cases the Brāhmana passage follows the Sanhitā and thus shows that this peculiarity of the Sanhitā was already before the framers of the Brāhmana.

In vi. 2. 10. 1 and 2 there is a clear discrepancy between the text of the Sanhitā and the use made of it, as is shown in the note on that passage. So also in vi. 3. 9. 3. Again in vi. 3. 6 the order of the proceedings in i. 3. 7 is clearly departed from. But it would be too much to rely on either case as a sign of a real discrepancy between the Mantras and the Brāhmaṇa; such variations are perfectly within the limits of possible divergency, and there are very few of them, nor are they of any material importance.

§ 6. THE BRAHMANA AND THE ARANYAKA.

We have seen that the evidence of language does not suggest any very serious difference in position between the Brāhmaṇa portions of the Sanhitā or the Brāhmaṇa or the Āraṇyaka, and this conclusion is fully justified by a consideration of the contents of these works, which in some degree invalidates the ordinary view 1 that the distinction of Sanhitā and Brāhmaṇa is one of time pure and simple.

It is clear at once that the Brāhmaṇa is a composite work, and doubtless it owes its existence to the desire of the Taittiriya school to emulate the Rgvedic tradition of Brāhmaṇa and Sanhitā, which led to the separation of both in the Vājasaneyi redaction. But the whole form of the work proves that its materials were merely then collected, not created. It shows as great a confusion of Mantra and Brāhmaṇa sections as the Sanhitā itself, as the following summary 2 shows:—

v. 1-12	Brāhmaņa
vi. 1-12	Mantra	The Pitrmedha
vii-x	Mantra and	Brāhmaņa Upaniṣads

There is no doubt that these two works are mere agglomerations of material: the tradition assigns to the Kāṭhaka school the whole of the Brāhmaṇa from iii. 10-12 and the Āraṇyaka, i and ii, and these sections show their origin by preserving y and v for iy and uv, the normal modes of writing of the Taittirīya itself. Moreover, in the Brāhmaṇa, ii. 2 and 3 treat of the Hotāraḥ Mantras of the Āraṇyaka, iii in quite a different way from the Brāhmaṇa, iii. 12. 5, the model used by the scholiast in his explanation of these Mantras, which naturally from their mystic nature lent themselves to many ritual and also magic uses, of which many are given in the earlier Brāhmaṇa text.

It is of great importance to note that the Sūtras accord in recognizing the whole content both of the Brāhmaņa and of the Aranyaka. Thus Baudhāyana (ii. 1) enumerates the whole content of the Brāhmaṇa and the Āranyaka, and, excluding the Upaniṣads and the Svādhyāya section (Āranyaka, ii), he deals with practically the whole text of those works known to us. It is true 1 that the commentary on the Kaukili Sautramani was early lost, and that those on the human sacrifice and the Hotarah are not known to exist, but both these are dealt with by Apastamba (xx. 24-25. 2; xiv. 13-5); the commentary on the Brāhmana, iii. 6, quotes Baudhāyana freely though the text is not yet elsewhere known, and we have the Vivarana of Bhavasvamin on the Caturmasya.

Similarly Apastamba covers the ground very fully, though naturally he does not deal with the Upanisads. Thus he deals with the Savas of the Brāhmana (ii. 7) in xxii. 25-28, both forms of the Sautrămanī in xix. 1-10, the optional animal and other offerings in xix. 16-27, the different forms of piling of the fire of the Kathaka in xix. 11-15, together with the Divaheyenī and Apādyā offerings, and the Hotarah (Āranyaka, iii) in xiv. 13-15. In other cases he quotes the text if he does not explain it, as in ix. 1. 20 he alludes to the Pitrmedha of Aranyaka, vi. Sayana on Aranyaka, vi, quotes, beside Baudhayana, the views of Bharadvaja, and not only often cites him elsewhere, but gives him as recognizing the use of the Upahomas (Brāhmana, ii. 4, 5) and the Prayaccittas (ibid. iii. 7), and adopts his views in part of the use of Aranyaka, iii. 15-21. Corroborative evidence can also be found in the relation of the Manava Crauta Sūtra to the Maitrāyanī Sanhitā.

The Sutras do not recognize any distinction between the Aranyaka, the Brahmana, or the Sanhita as regards their Brahmana portions.3 The term brāhmana is constantly used in Baudhāyana and Āpastamba to cover either the Brahmana parts of the Sanhita or the Brahmana parts of the Brāhmaņa or the Brāhmaṇa parts of the Āranyaka; brāhmana indeed has not a technical sense as a reference to a definite text or portion of a text, but merely as a ritual explanation, which in certain cases is sufficiently detailed to render further detailed description needless; e.g. in Apastamba (xix, 15, 16, 18) it is said briefly of the Arunaketuka and Divaheyenayah rites that they are explained in the Brahmana, the first being found in the Aranyaka, i, and the latter in the Brahmana, iii. 12. 1, 2. So far as we can judge there is no trace of any distinction being felt by the Sūtrakāras between the nature of the texts before them; they fit all into one of two categories, either Mantra or Brahmana. Moreover, these Mantras and Brahmana portions were arranged in Anuvakas, and these Anuvākas were classed in sections by subject-matter. But it would be impossible, so far as can be seen, to prove that to them even the Sanhitā was yet a definite unit; this was the case as regards matter by the time of the Pada text and the Prāticākhya, though not necessarily arranged in the exact order as at present, and even in the Kandanukrama the exact order is not yet apparently fixed. For the Brāhmana and the Āranyaka there is not the evidence of the Pada text or the Praticakhya, and the Kandanukrama so freely alters the arrangement of the Brahmana and Aranyaka that it is probably fair to conclude that the order of the sections was not then at all fixed; similarly the Sutras themselves were not at first arranged in definite order. Thus it is still very doubtful what place should in Baudhayana be ascribed to the Pravargya: there is evidence that it was sometimes placed before and sometimes after the Agnistoma; 1 there is also doubt as to the position of the Kathaka section,2 and in the case of Apastamba the Pravargya, though it now appears as xv, refers (xv. 1. 4) to a subsequent section (xvi. 1. 7), and in yet other cases seems to have been placed between the tenth and the eleventh chapters.3 It seems, therefore, that the fixing of the order of the texts is a later product.

The question, however, arises, at what period and for what reasons the Sanhitā was fixed as a whole, to the exclusion of the Brāhmaṇa and the Āraṇyaka? The step was taken by the time the Pada text was constructed, and if we trust the Kāṇḍānukrama⁴ the maker of it, Ātreya, applied the process to an existing text proclaimed by Ukha, who had learned it from Tittiri, his teacher being Yāska Paingi, who learned from Vaiçampāyana. It is, of course, possible, that the Pada text was the origin of the differentiation of the Sanhitā and the Brāhmaṇa, but this seems improbable,⁵ and it is more likely that the Sanhitā owes its peculiar character to its being put together by some teacher whose authority was adequate to secure its acceptance in the school, perhaps the hand of Tittiri himself, for Weber's suggestion of his derivation from the motley character of the work is hardly to be seriously considered.

It is, at any rate, impossible to adopt what might seem the easier explanation that the Brāhmaṇa represents later additions due to the development of the sacrificial ritual. That this is true of certain portions both of the Brāhmaṇa and the Āraṇyaka is indeed very probable; the Upaniṣads, the Kāṭhaka sections, the human sacrifice (Brāhmaṇa, ii. 4), the Piṭṛmedha (Araṇyaka, vi), the Nakṣatreṣṭayaḥ (Brāhmaṇa, i. 5. 1-3;

iii. 1), the Svādhyāyabrāhmana (Aranyaka, ii) may for various reasons be regarded as later additions. The Upanisads are evidence of a more developed philosophical tendency than is seen in the Sanhitā, and in detail show traces of later origin. Thus Aranyaka, vii has an Upanişad of the Sanhita, which may be compared with that in the Aitareya Āranyaka, iii, and which recognizes the phenomenon of Sandhi clearly and very probably implicitly recognizes the Sanhitā text: it also mentions Cīksā, which is not mentioned by name in the Aitareya. Aranyaka, ix in its style shows a marked preference for the narrative perfect, having eleven perfects to ten imperfects, a phenomenon totally opposed to the facts as regards the Sanhitā and the greater part of the Brāhmana. Āranyaka, x is admittedly late, containing among other things a supplement to the Catarudrīya which shows clear traces of the infusion of the later characteristics of Rudra-Civa.1 In this connexion it is of interest to note that the Tribhāsyaratna on Prātiçākhya, xviii. 1, quotes the ends of the Sanhitā, and the Brāhmana, and of Aranyaka, v. It is probable that the explanation of this fact is to be looked for in a question of arrangement: the Upanisads are older, of course, than the Tribhāsyaratna, a modern text, as is shown by the fact that the Giksa, which is older than the Tribhāsyaratna, quotes thrice (226, 336, 339) from the Yājāikī, the latest of them all. But the Upanisads may well in some versions have been regarded as not part of the Aranyaka, and it is not a fatal objection 3 to this suggestion of Sieg's that the sixth book of the Aranyaka is the Pitrmedha and not an Upanisad at all, for the Pitrmedha may well have occupied a different place in the order of the Aranyaka in different recensions. The Pitrmedha, moreover, is in the Baudhayana ritual placed after the Grhya Sütra, i. e. very late in the composition of the text, which is another sign of its loose place in the tradition. The Pitrmedha also seems on other grounds to be a later addition; it has no parallel in the other, Kāthaka and Maitrāyanī, texts, and seems to denote a ritual development of the same type as the Grhya ritual.7 The Pravargya sections (Aranyaka, iv and v) seem also to be a later addition, as the parallel to the Mantras is found only in the Khila book of the Maitrayani (iv. 9), and there is no parallel to the Brahmana at all therein. This is supported by the fact that the Vajasaneyi has the Mantras in books xxxvi-xxxix, a supplement, and the Catapatha Brahmana treats of the Pravargya in its last book, together with the Upanisad, both in the Mādhyamdina and also apparently once in the Kānva recension. Aranyaka, ii treats of the study rules of the Veda and may be compared with Catapatha Brāhmaņa, xi. 5. 6 and 7, passages which occur in a book of supplementary matter: there are in sections 7-12 three perfects to twenty-three imperfects, but this is not of much importance in itself: on the other hand, the nature of the subject-matter is clearly not very early and the other Black Yajurveda Sanhitā texts have no parallel.1 The Kāthaka sections (Brāhmana, iii. 10-12; Āranyaka, i) go together: they contain supplementary methods of piling the fire and may reasonably be considered late on that ground and in view of the lack of parallels in the other Sanhitas, including the Vajasaneyi and the Catapatha Brāhmana. In form the sections show somewhat curious divergences: in iii. 10 there are twenty-six perfects to seven imperfects; in iii, 11 the figures are twenty-one to twenty-seven; in iii. 12 only two to sixty-one; and in Aranyaka, i. 23 there are thirty imperfects without a perfect.

All the Aranyaka may thus be deemed later than the Sanhitā in its composition as regards the Brāhmana passages, and in its redaction to its existing form as regards the Mantra portions; some of the Mantras are no doubt late inventions, but some are old Mantras in a new setting. In the case of the Brāhmana the Naksatrestayah (i. 5. 1-3; iii. 1. 1-6) have no parallel in the other Sanhitas or the Catapatha, and must be regarded as later in character on the whole: the style of iii. 1 is, however, free of any narrative perfect, thus conforming to the general style of the Brāhmana. The Mantras for the Hotr at the animal sacrifice are found in iii. 6 and only paralleled in the Khila book of the Maitrayani, iv. 13. with scattered passages in the last chapters of books xv, xvi, and xviii of the Kāthaka, and so must be a later addition, but they are parallel with the late chapter (iii. 5. 11) of the Sanhitā itself. The Kaukilī Sautrāmani, as contrasted with the Sautrāmani of the Rajasuya (TS. i. 8. 21), is dealt with in ii. 6; it has parallels only in the appended books (xix, xx, and xxi) of the Vājasaneyi,3 in a late book (xxxviii) of the Kāthaka, and in iii. 11 of the Maitrayant, where it is somewhat out of place. The Savas and the Sūktas of ii. 7 and 8 with Aranyaka, iii. 14 (and 15), are apparently late, as the latter has no direct parallel in the Kathaka and the former only in book xxxvii, while ii. 8 has close parallels only in the last chapter (iv. 14) of the Maitrāyanī, and is a collection of Yājyānuvākyās for the optional animal offerings. In ii. 7 there is also found the treatment of the late form of sacrifice, the Aptoryāma; there are fifty-four imperfects to a solitary perfect. The Upahomas of ii. 4 and 5, Mantra chapters, are also of a supplementary character. The Achidrakāṇḍa (iii. 7) presents both Mantra and Brāhmaṇa, and its subject, Prāyaccittas, is of a supplementary character: there are no narrative tenses at all. The list of victims for the human sacrifice in iii. 4 has no parallel in any other Black Yajurveda Saṅhitā, but it has a parallel in the late book Vājasaneyi, xxx. Brāhmaṇa, ii. 2 and 3, explains the Hotr Mantras known as Caturhotāraḥ in Āraṇyaka, iii, and is clearly an addition, but it has a parallel in Kāṭhaka, ix, and Maitrāyaṇī, i. 9.

Of the remaining sections of the Brāhmaṇa, iii. 8 and 9 explain the Açvamedha and have a parallel only in the Catapatha Brāhmaṇa, xiii; to thirty-six and fifty-five imperfects respectively there is only one perfect each to be set off, and there are no special signs of lateness in the chapters other than those to be derived from the subject-matter and the exceptional position of the sacrifice.

In addition to these longer passages there are others which show very clearly their supplementary character. Thus i. 2. 2-6; 4.5-7 deal with the Sattras and the Soma sacrifice respectively; the former adds nothing important to book vii of the Sanhita, the latter gives some Prayaccittas,3 a clear sign of lateness. Other addenda are made to the Soma sacrifice in i. 4. 1 which deals with the Soma cups, i. 5. 4 which treats of the bowls, and i. 5. 9-12. In i. 5. 9 are addenda to the rite between the consecration rites and the first pressing, 10 deals with the Trivet Stoma and other Stomas, 11 with the cake-offering of the animal sacrifice, and 12 with the seven metres. The passages contain, beside perfects like juhavām cakruh and apajaghnire, the story of Prahrada Kayavadha, and the description of the kuçīs, pins used to mark out recitations of the Sāman singers, which are not found in other Yajurveda texts. In i. 4. 3, 4 are given Prāyaccittas for the errors in the milking and in the fire in the Agnihotra ritual (Brāhmana, ii. 1). It is also legitimate to regard with suspicion the scattered fragments of the Rājasūya, viz. two Brāhmaṇa sections on the Căturmāsya rites (i. 4. 9, 10), and the shaving Mantras in i. 5. 5 with the Brahmana in i. 5. 6, and the Sautramani Mantras in i. 4, 2 which do not belong to the Kaukili form of that rite (Brāhmana, ii. 6). In i. 1. 1 and i. 4. 8 occur odd Mantras for the Soma sacrifice, the first an addition to the Çukra and Manthin Grahas (Sanhitā, i. 4. 8, 9), the second Pavamana verses for the sacrificer.1 In i. 5. 7, 8 the Mantras are given for the Samtati and Atharvaciras bricks respectively, the former following the Apānabhṛts (Sanhitā, iv. 3. 3), the latter following in place the Atmestakās of the Sanhitā, v. 5. 8, which is itself later than the bulk of the text of iv and v, and being evidently the subject of the comment in Saihitā, v. 6. 6. 3. The verses occur in the Maitrāyanī, ii. 13. 6, but in the Kāthaka only in xxxix. 12, which accords with the appearance in this use only in the supplementary part of the Sanhitā. Again in v. 7. 1. 1 and v. 7. 9. 4 certain of the verses in the Naciketa fire-piling (iii. 11. 6. 3) are referred to, but it would be unwise to assume that the section in which these verses were found was also then existing. It may also be noted that to the Sanhitā, v. 5. 2. 1, there is a precisely parallel passage in the Brahmana, iii. 9. 8. 1, where the same situation is described, in the one case having reference to the piling of the fire, and in the other to the horse sacrifice. It is unnecessary to suppose either is the original of the other passage; they may well both belong to one composer.

On the other hand, the Sanhitā contains a portion, in the description of the new and full moon ritual, which essentially requires to be supplemented by the Mantras of the Brāhmaṇa, iii. 5. Thus ii. 5. 7 and 8 comment on the Brāhmaṇa, iii. 5. 1 and 2; ii. 5. 9 on iii. 5. 3. 1-4. 1; ii. 6. 1, 2 on iii. 5. 5-7; ii. 6. 7 on iii. 5. 8; ii. 6. 9 on iii. 5. 10; ii. 6. 10 on iii. 5. 11; in ii. 6. 4 there is a Brāhmaṇa in part parallel with iii. 2. 9; and in ii. 6. 5 a parallel with iii. 3. 6. But it is not possible to assert that the collection of the Brāhmaṇa was precisely that presupposed in the Sanhitā.

In one case, iii. 5.11, the Sanhitā presents what is in effect a supplement to the Brāhmaṇa (iii. 6), giving the Mantras for the Hotr for the animal sacrifice. In the Kāthaka (xv. 12) and in the Maitrāyaṇī (iv. 10. 4; 13.1) the verses are also given in connexion with the Mantras found in the Brāhmaṇa. But iii. 5.11 belongs, like the Yājyānuvākyā sections generally, to the latest strata of the Sanhitā, and deals with Mantras of a priest other than the Adhvaryu.

The Hotarah in the Āranyaka, iii, have a parallel in the Kāthaka, ix, and the Maitrāyanī, i. 9, and in so far have a certain antiquity, though the essential nature of the Hotarah is a development of the sacrificial ritual in the direction of the Upanisads. The Brāhmana in the Brāhmana, ii. 2 and 3, is in a similar position; its turning of the formulae to magical usages is not primitive.

There remain certain passages which have a greater claim to originality and early date. (1) The omission of the account of the establishing of the fires in the Sanhitā is supplied in the Brāhmaṇa, both Mantra (i. 1.7; 2.1) and Brāhmaṇa (i. 1.2-6, 8-10). The passage is found in the Maitrāyaṇī Sanhitā (i. 6) as follows:

i. 6. 1, 2 = Brāhmana, i. 1. 7; 2. 1. 4, 5 = i. 1. 5, 3. 6 = i. 1. 7. 7 i. 1. 8. 8 i. 1. 6. 9 i. 1. 2, =10 = i. 1. 6. 12 i. 1. 9.  13 1. 1. 4.

There are also passages in the Kāṭhaka (vii. 15; viii. 1, 3-5, 10) and the Catapatha Brāhmaṇa (ii. 1. 1-2. 2), and the Kapiṣṭhala, vii.

(2) In i. 3. 2-9 there is found the Brāhmaņa for the Vājapeya. There are Brāhmaņas in the Maitrāyaņī (i. 11. 4-9), the Kāṭhaka (xiv. 5-10), and the Catapatha (v. 1. 1-2. 2).

(3) In i. 6. 1–8. 10 is found the main Brāhmaṇa for the Rājasūya, including the Cāturmāsya; the Maitrāyaṇī (i. 10. 5–20) gives the Cāturmāsya as in i. 6, and the rest of the parallel to i. 7 and 8 in iv. 3 and 4, the Khila book of that text. The Kāṭhaka (xxxvi. 1–14) has a parallel to the Cāturmāsya. The Catapatha has parallels to the Cāturmāsya in ii. 5 and 6, and to the Rājasūya in v. 2. 3–5. 5.

(4) The Brāhmaṇa for the Agnihotra occurs in ii. 1, and has parallels in the Kāṭhaka, vi, the Kapiṣṭhala, iv, the Maitrāyaṇā, i. 8, and the Catapatha, v. 1. 1-2. 2. The imperfect in narrative is found without exception in all these four passages.¹

(5) The Brāhmaṇa for the new and full moon sacrifice occurs in iii. 2 and 3. It has parallels in the Kāṭhaka, xxxi, the Kapiṣṭhala, xlvii, the Maitrāyaṇi, iv. 1, and the Catapatha, i. The chapters have respectively three and two perfects to sixty-three and seventeen imperfects in narrative.

§ 7. THE RELATION OF THE SANHITA TO OTHER TEXTS.

(a) The other Sainhitas of the Yajurveda.

It is beyond question that the Mantras of the Taittiriya must have been developed in that school from a common stock, which also afforded the origin of other Sanhitas, and especially of the Kathaka, the Kapisthala, and the Maitrayani Sanhitas. All these texts show a generic similarity which marks them off, as tradition asserts, from the White Yajurveda, as represented by the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā and the Catapatha Brāhmana. The mere fact of the careful separation of Mantra and Brāhmana shown in those texts proves that they were thus arranged deliberately as an improvement on the confusion of the Taittiriya and other texts.1 It is true that this confusion may be overrated: 2 the great fire-piling ritual in Taittiriya, iv, in Mantra is separated clearly from the Brāhmaṇa in v; and i. 1-4 is also purely Mantra with a widely separated Brahmana (Taittiriya Brahmana, iii. 2, 3; Sanhitā, vi), and there are similar distinctions in the other texts. But the fact remains, as the list given above shows, that in many cases Mantra and Brahmana do go hand in hand, and in some cases even in the Taittiriya are found adjacent in the same section, a feature more common in the system of division of the Kathaka and Maitrayani texts.

It does not, of course, follow that the composition of the verses and the Brāhmaṇa passages were originally contemporaneous and that a Yajurveda Sanhitā from the first was a complex of Mantra and Brāhmaṇa. Such a view is not very probable. The collection of Mantras must have become a more or less fixed matter, while speculation was still of less account. The ritual must have demanded fixed texts before the priests began to lay stress on the mystic interpretation of those texts being turned into a text-book for formal record. But we cannot doubt that our existing Sanhitās were constructed when the importance of the speculation was at least as great as that of the Mantras. The Mantras are taken over as an integral part of the texts and as a basis for the speculations.

It is a clear sign of the fact that the Mantras are accepted as a basis rather than used as a chief object of the compilation that in some cases they are taken over in a wholly hopeless form. Thus in i, 2, 2 c; iv. 1, 9 b, and in the Brāhmaṇa, iv. 1, 9, 1; vi. 1, 2, 5, 6 the line RV. v. 50, 1 is rendered utterly meaningless by the change of viçvo to viçve and iṣudhyati to iṣudhyasi; the Vājasaneyi (iv. 8), Kāthaka (ii. 2), and Maitrāyanī (ii. 7, 7) have the correct text. So in vii. 3, 11, 1 úpa te huve savāhám is certainly inferior to asā(v) ahám of the Kāṭhaka (Açvamedha, iii. 1). Again in vii. 4, 13, 3 sulāmi is really a vox nihili, though tilāmi of the Vājasaneyi (xxiii. 24), which is supported by the Çānkhāyana Çrauta

Sūtra (xvi. 4. 1) and the Āçvalāyana (x. 8) is equally of uncertain value.¹ Even the sacrificial cry, çónsā móda iva, given in iii. 2. 9. 5, is of doubtful accuracy,² as is the accentuation of vāc¹ in ukthám vācɨndrāya, iii. 2. 9. 1—4, if the Pada text is authentic in its version.³ In iv. 1. 9 c the vocative dhṛṣṇu is clearly a mere blunder as compared with the Vājasaneyi, xi. 68.

It is perfectly clear that the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā in the text is inferior in originality to the text of the Black Yajurveda: it has evidently been altered in course of time and before its present redaction to correspond closely with the text of the Rgveda, and indeed in one recension the Rgveda treatment of d between vowels as I has been adopted. The conclusion is therefore justified that the Vajasaneyi was reduced to its present form when the influence of the Rgveda was more and more predominating, and it is reasonable to assign it to a later period than the Black texts, including the Taittiriya. This applies even to the more original books i-xviii which contain the portions of the Sanhitā, which belong clearly to the early joint stock of the Yajurveda Sanhitas, and of course more strongly to the other books, which present the Sautramani (xix-xxi), the Acvamedha (xxii-xxv), supplements to the early sections (xxvi and xxvii) and to the later sections (xxviii and xxix), the Puruşamedha (xxx and xxxi), the Sarvamedha (xxxii and xxxiii), the Upanisads (xxxiv. 1-6; xl), the Pitryajña (xxxv) and the Pravargya (xxxvi-xxxix), to all of which parallels are to be found only in the Brahmana or the Aranyaka or supplementary parts of the Sanhita. It is in harmony with this later character of the Sanhitā that tradition itself does not ascribe its Brahmana, the Catapatha, to a very early period, for Apastamba in the Dharma Sūtra (i. 2. 5. 6) talks of Cvetaketu as an avara.5

It does not seem to be possible to derive any real criterion of comparative age from the treatment of Rgvedic Mantras in the three Sanhitās of the Black Yājurveda. It is the case that in each from time to time there are marked divagations from the Rgvedic form. The Kāthaka and the Maitrāyanī in these cases often agree with each other against the Rgveda and the Taittirīya: thus in iv. 1. 8 the Taittirīya preserves a fairly accurate version of the hymn, x. 121. But in harmony the other two texts maltreat the hymn: in v. 4 the mention of the Himavant mountains gives way to the colourless 'all hills'; in the same verse the double genitive (yásyemáh pradíço yásya bāhú) yields to the tame díço yásya pradíçah páñca devih, another of many cases of the love of the later texts with tags from x. 110. 9 (yá imé dyávaprthiví) and i. 62. 7 (ádhārayad ródasī). But the genuineness of the Rgveda version is shown beyond all conceivable doubt by the parallel in ii. 12. 8 yán krándasī sanyatī vihváyete, for that hymn was clearly the model for x. 121, which asserts the supremacy of Prajāpati, as the former that of Indra.

In other passages, however, there is no such clear distinction between the different Sanhitas, and that now one, now the other, has a better text is certain, and no one can claim any general or marked superiority. Thus in i. 7. 8 r the Taittiriya preserves samadhadhvam, which in view of sumdhå just before is better than sumádadhvam of the Kāthaka (xiv. 1) and the Maitrayani (i. 11. 3). In i. 7, 10 f the Taittiriya and Vajasanoyi (ix. 27) read vácam vísnum sárasvatím for vátam of the Rgveda (x. 141. 5) and the Atharvaveda (iii. 20. 7), while the Kāṭhaka (xiv. 2) puts vacam after visnum; the Maitrayani (i. 11. 4) agrees with the Taittiriya. There can be little doubt that vatam is original and that vacam is a later development, which in the Kāthaka is creeping still closer to Sarasvatī. In iv. 1. 2 a (= vii. 1. 11 a) the third Pada ruins the sense (táyā devāh sutám á babhūvuh) by throwing the fourth Pada out of construction; the Maitrayanī (iii. 12. 1) and the Vājasaneyi (xxii. 2) have the correct sá no asmint somám á babhūva, giving perfect construction. As agrbhnan in the first Pada is altered to suit devâh, we have here a clear case of a deliberate change of a line out of construction, perhaps for the sake of the ritual, though as the Brahmana (v. 1. 2. 1) stands the verse applies to the speaker and so agrbhnam as in the other texts would be in place. Possibly, however, originally the verse was said of others haltering the horse, not of the speaker, which would explain the third person. In iv. 1. 2 l the other three Sanhitas have ádhvanam for ádhvanah, and their reading seems preferable. In iv. 1.3c the third Pada presents the hopeless line várdhamanam mahá á ca púskaram; the Kathaka (xvi. 3) has várdhmano maháň á ca púskare, and so the Vajasaneyi (xi. 29) and Maitrāyanī (ii. 7. 3). In iv. 2. 2 g vásoh sūnúh is contrasted with vásuh in Kāthaka (xvi. 9), Maitrāyanī (ii. 7. 9), Vājasaneyi (xii. 22), and so the Roveda (x. 45. 5). In iv. 5. 10 civá rudrásya bhesají is read, but in the Vājasaneyi (xvi. 49), Maitrāyanī (ii. 9. 9 with a v. l. rudrásya) and Kāṭhaka (xvii. 16) have rutásya, while the Kāṇva of Vājasaneyi (xvii. 8. 3) has rtásya. In the names of the Gandharvas as Soma-watchers in i. 2. 7 is read svána bhrājānghāre bámbhāre; so Vājāsaneyi (iv. 27), the Maitrāyaṇī (i. 2. 5) has suvān nābhrāḍ ánghāre bámbhāre, and the Kāṭhaka (ii. 6) has svān nabhrāḍ ānghāre bambāre. Pāṇini (vi. 3. 75) recognizes nabhrāj, and von Schroeder¹ thinks that nabh-rāj, 'ruling in the clouds', is meant. In many passages again the variants are such as to be of about equal value and significance, a fact which is only natural when it is remembered that the texts are not artificial compositions, but the expressions of the religious services of priestly families well acquainted with a large field of formulae and liable to adopt and change the inherited text in such manner as might commend itself to them. This fact forbids indeed any successful attempt to restore an original Black Yajurveda Sanhitā.

While therefore there is perhaps no such striking and elaborate case of change in the Taittiriya as in the Kāṭhaka and Maitrāyanī as regards Rgveda, x. 121, it would be unwise to insist on this fact as a chronological criterion of absolute value. The school tradition diverged, we see, and there are two branches, namely the Taittirīya and, on the other hand, the Kāṭhaka-Maitrāyanī with the Kapiṣṭhala, which in themselves clearly are very closely related, as their community of order, content, and readings show. In the Açvamedha the Kāṭhaka has, however, adopted the Taittirīya almost bodily, but the Açvamedha there forms a separate book, not part of the original Saḥhitā, and so the borrowing does not tell against the ascription of an equal age to Kāṭhaka and Taittirīya.

Oldenberg has suggested for consideration the question whether, since the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā presents in the main a text of the Yajurveda revised under Rgvedic influences, the Taittirīya and Maitrāyanī may not go back to the original Yajurveda without any intermediate stage: that is, the derivation may be from the original to the three Sanhitās direct, and not to the Vājasaneyi direct and in the case of the Taittirīya and Maitrāyanī through one intermediate version. The question must be framed a little differently, for the Kāthaka-Kapisthala and the Maitrāyanī seem clearly to belong to one derivative form of the original Yajurveda, and it is with their primitive source that the question of relation to the Taittirīya must deal. We have then in the Taittirīya, on the one side, and in the earlier source of the other Black Yajus texts, on the other, two variants, and it is certainly possible that these variants may each be a direct derivative from a primitive Sanhitā, whence also the Vājasaneyi is directly derived, but considerably remoulded and changed.

Thus the version of x. 121 is in the Taittiriya and the Vājasaneyi consistently similar to that of the Rgveda, and it is reasonable to assume that the form preserved in these texts represents the original Yajurveda as against the mutilations of the Kāṭhaka and Maitrāyanī, which must have begun in a derivate from the original text and not in a form common to the whole of the Black Yajurveda. Still the fact of frequent correspondences with the Rgveda and the Vājasaneyi as against the other texts is not of conclusive weight against the theory of an earlier Black Yajus text as a prius for the Taittirīya, for the influence of the Rgveda must always have been a great one, as is seen by the taking over of the Yājyās and Puronuvākyās practically wholesale. Nor is there available any other criterion which can be used with decisive effect. What can be said is that direct derivation from the original Yajus is not at all unlikely.

The Indian tradition, as usual, affords no real help. The Caranavyūka1 gives as one branch of the Yajurveda the Carakas, under whom fall ten divisions including the Kathas, the Kapisthala-Kathas, and the Maitrayanīyas, of whom there are seven subdivisions, including the Manavas and the Haridraviyas. The Taittiriyas appear as a separate school with two subdivisions, Aukhīyas and Khāndikīyas. The Vājasaneyi school is also given separately, but this we could infer with certainty from the existing texts and it is only of value as a confirmation of what is certain. In the colophons of the Chambers MS.3 of the Kāthaka Sanhitā the term Kāthake appears with Carakaçākhāyām, and Eggeling 3 conjectures that the Caraka text of the Kāthaka is that text which does not contain those sections which have been adopted bodily into the Taittiriya Brahmana and Āranyaka (viz. Brāhmaņa, iii. 10-12; Āranyaka, i and ii). Nor is this unlikely, but the evidence of a MS. colophon is, of course, too little to build upon. In later texts the Carakas cover all the Black Yajurveda schools, as for example in the Pratijnasūtra. In the Catapatha Brahmana the Carakas appear in a good many passages,5 usually as advocating some practice opposed to that approved by the Vajasaneyi school, but there is no means of deciding from the citations which Sanhitā was before the minds of the Catapatha writers, for the references cannot be traced all to any of the Sanhitas available, and we cannot exclude the great probability that the Catapatha was acquainted with the usages of some school of Carakas other than those preserved. It is therefore impossible to assert as did Weber that Caraka ever applied to the Black Yajus as a whole, but it is of interest that Khandika occurs as a teacher in the Catapatha (xi. 8. 4. 1).

Von Schroeder 2 has argued at length in favour of the early date of the Kāthaka and Maitrāyanī Sanhitās in comparison with the Taittirīya. He lays some stress on the fact that according to the Kandanukrama the teacher of Tittiri was Yaska Paingi and his teacher was Vaicampayana, whereas Katha was a pupil of Vaiçampāyana, according to Patanjali,3 and Kalāpin, according to Pānini, a pupil of Vaicampāyana; as the Kālāpa was probably the source of the Maitrayaniya school,5 the teachers of the Käthaka and the Maitrayani were thus older than the teacher of the Taittiriva. It is, however, difficult to accept this argument as of much value. Vaicampāyana is not alluded to in the Taittirīya Sanhitā or Brāhmana, and only appears in Aranyaka, i. 7. 5, where he merely seems to be a minor teacher. He is known to Pānini e evidently as an important teacher, but, assuming that the tradition as to Katha is correct, still all we obtain is the fact that the texts of the Taittiriya school, the Katha and Kalapa, were produced by persons pupils of Vaicampayana: we cannot, however, assume that the texts as handed down by these pupils were created by them or that the younger pupil produced a more modern text. Similarly it is not possible to see any special importance in the argument that the Katha and the Kālāpa schools were famous in every village, which the Mahābhāṣya? tells us and the Rāmāyana confirms. Nor is there any value in the mere mention of those schools in Panini," for the Taittiriya school is mentioned therein.10

Moreover, Durga on Nirukta, x. 5, calls the Hāridravika a Brāhmaņa of a school of the Maitrāyanīyas, which is confirmed by the Caranavyāha (Indische Studien, iii. 258), while a verse cited in the Kāçikā on Pāṇini, iv. 3. 104, makes the Haridru a sub-school of the Kālāpaka.

On the other hand, it is worth noticing that the Nirukta (x. 5) actually quotes two texts, the Kāthaka and the Hāridravika. But the quotation yad arudat tad rudrasya rudratvam has not yet been found in the Kāthaka as known to us, though xxv. I has yat samarujat tad rudrasya rudratvam. On the other hand the Haridravika quotation yad arodit is actually found in the Taittiriya, i. 5. 1. 1,1 and the argument is not at all clear in favour of the Kāthaka. On the other hand, the Nirukta (iii. 4) contains a quotation tasmāt striyam jātām parāsyanti na pumānsam, which is found in the Maitrāyanī (iv. 6.4; 7.9) and the Kāthaka (xxvii.9), but only in a different form in the Taittiriya. It would be unwise to lay stress on the fact that Yāska does not quote the Taittirīya by name, as he cites so few texts and yet certainly knew many more,2 but it may be noted that the Yaskas Gairiksitas are mentioned as teachers in the Kāthaka (xiii. 12), which shows that Yaska Paingi in the Kandanukrama need not be a mere fiction, though to identify that Yaska with him of the Nirukta is certainly quite unjustifiable.

Nor can any more definite results be assumed from geographical data. It is true that the commentary on the Caranavyūha and other satisfactory evidence 4 show that in later times the Katha-Kapisthala school was spread in Kaçmir and the Punjab, the Maitrayaniyas in the Gujerat territory and the land north of the Narmada, the Taittiriyas were widespread in the south, whence both Apastamba 5 and Baudhayana 6 came, and the Vajasaneyins covered the north-east and east. The names of Kabaios and Καμβίσθολοι of tribes in the Punjab and of Μαδιανδινοί on the Andhomati preserved in the Greek texts, throw a welcome light on the earlier state of affairs, as they confirm the distribution of the schools which existed later. But these notices do not touch the case of the Taittiriya school. It must be clearly realized that the Baudhayana and Apastamba schools were merely schools of Sutra writers: there is no ground whatever for regarding the Taittiriya as the text of Apastamba 8 in any sense distinguishing it from the text of the school from which Apastamba divagated. According to the Caranavyūha b the Taittiriyas divided into two branches, the Aukhīyas, which in the Kāndānukrama include the Ātreya school, and the Khāndikīyas, of whom there were five branches, the Kāleyas (Kāteyas), Çātyāyanas, Hiranyakeças, Bhāradvājas, and Āpastambas, or according to the Devipurāṇa, Kāleyas, Baudhāyanīyas, Hiranyakeças, Bhāradvājas, and Āpastambas.¹ But there is here no tradition of separate texts of the Sanhitā or Brāhmaṇa, and the Caraṇavyūha treats them as Sūtra schools. It is therefore of more importance to observe that the Rāmāyaṇa, if it mentions the Kaṭha and Kālāpa schools in Ayodhyā, also places the Taittirīyas there (ii. 32. 16).

Moreover it is in the Madhyadeca that the Taittiriya Sanhitā and Brāhmana and Aranyaka alike place their sphere of activity. In the Rājasūva (i. 8. 10 d; 12 h) the proclamation of the king is given in the words, 'This is your king, O Bharatas', and the Brahmana (i. 7. 4. 2; 6. 7) repeats the words. Their treatment in the Sutras is characteristic: Apastamba (xviii. 12. 7) gives the text and variants of 'O Kurus', 'O Pañcālas', 'O Kuru-Pañcālas', and 'O peoples' (janatāh), in other cases. Baudhāyana (x. 56) has eşá vo 'mī rājā, only one MS. borrowing the Bharatāh of the real text. The Vājasaneyi (ix. 40; x. 18) has the same colourless formula, and so the Catapatha (v. 3. 3. 12; 4. 2. 3; ix. 4. 3. 16). The Kāthaka (xv. 7) and the Maitrāyanī (ii. 6, 9; iv. 4, 3) have esá te janate rājā, and the Kānva version of the Vājasaneyi (xi. 3. 3; 6. 3) the variants of 'O Kurus', 'O Pancalas'. It can hardly be doubted that the Bharata name is the oldest and points to the Rgvedic tradition of the greatness of a family or tribe which merged in the Kuru-Pañcala alliance.2 In the Brahmana (i. 8. 4. 1, 2) the Kuru-Pañcala princes are chosen as the exemplars of warlike chiefs. In the Aranyaka (v. 1) the boundaries of Kuruksetra are given.3 It is beyond all reasonable doubt that the home of the Taittiriya school was the middle country, just as much as it was the home of the Kāthaka, the Maitrāyani, and even the Vājasaneyi and the Catapatha,4 and no argument from its geographical data can be adduced in favour of a late date.

Von Schroeder, however, relies also for the theory of the superior age of the other two texts on the grammatical forms of an antique character found in them and noticed by the grammarians, and the Dhātupāṭha. Such are the root stigh (MS. i. 6. 3; ii. 1. 12); the forms abhyutsādayām akar (i. 6. 5), prajanayām akar (i. 6. 10; 8. 5); pāvayām kuryāt (ii. 1. 3), all mentioned by Pāṇini (iii. 1. 42); the infinitive sāḍhyai (i. 6. 3); the feminines manāyī (i. 8. 6, &c.), kusitāyī (ii. 1. 11; iii. 2. 6); the adjective äryakṛtī (i. 8. 3); the words vāstva (ii. 2. 4), udāja (i. 10. 6; the Kāṭhaka (xxviii. 3) and Kapiṣṭhala (xliv. 3) have nirāja), agrīya (= agriya; i. 6. 10, &c.), bhaviṣṇu (i. 8. 1), sarvāhṇa (i. 8. 9), baṅhīyaṅs (i. 8. 3), and the forms bhakṣaṅkāra (iv. 7. 3), uruyā (for urviyā in the Kāṭhaka: ii. 7. 8; 8. 2; iii. 2. 1), and açvavāra (iii. 7. 9, where the Kāṭhaka (xxiv. 8) has açvavāla). As common to the Maitrāyaṇī with the Kāṭhaka or Kapiṣṭhala he cites the use of the roots kçā (for khyā), plāy (pra + √i), saṅvatsarīya, antarloma, and bahirloma, dakṣiṇāt in dakṣiṇātsad and dakṣiṇādvāta, ojasya, ākhukiri, apākartoḥ, and pac with the accusative in the form pacyate of the ripening of fruit. There are other cases where the grammarians clearly used the text (e.g. nabhrāj (i. 2. 5), jīvanaç (i. 4. 13), jajanat (i. 3. 20 or i. 9. 1), dhenumbhavyā (iv. 4. 8), the root saūc (i. 10. 20), the alleged root thurv (ii. 10.1), the words yavana (i. 2. 10), kṣullakavaiçvadeva (ii. 11. 5), çvovasīyasa (iii. 4. 9), the patronymics Āṣokeya (iii. 5. 4) and Haitanāmana (iii. 4. 6)).

Now it is not very clear what the force of this argument is. Von Schroeder indeed ventures a hint that the fact that acvavara and udaja are found in the Maitrāyanī and noted by Pānini, while açvavāla and nirāja are used in the Kāthaka, is some evidence of the priority of the Maitrāyanī to the Kāthaka. Of course, it is nothing of the kind: the form acvavāra is not cited by Pāṇini at all, but is found only referred to in the Vārttika 2 on Pāṇini, viii. 2. 18, according to the schol., though udāja is given in vii. 3. 60; iii. 3. 69. But it would be ludicrous to assume that the Kāthaka was later than Panini, and if not later then we must admit that Pāṇini could overlook words in it, and once this admission is made we see that the silence of Panini is of no evidential value. The fact that the text was used by Panini shows its importance but has nothing to do with its comparative age, and von Schroeder has himself laid stress on the fact that the Kathaka found its home in great measure in Kacmir. where the recent researches of scholars have found large stores of Kāthaka MSS.1 Now Pāṇini lived in the north-west,2 and therefore would naturally lay stress on the forms of the Katha-Kapisthala and the allied Maitrāyanīya school, rather than on those of the Taittirīya which seems never to have penetrated northwards from its home in the middle country. Patañjali, it should be added, knows and quotes the Sanhitā.3

It remains therefore to consider the forms on their own merits, and in this light they do not support any general theory of priority of age. The periphrastic forms utsādayām akar, &c., are certainly evidence the other way, for the formation is not a primitive one, and the Taittirīya Brāhmana gives vidām akran just as does the Maitrāyanī (i. 4. 7). dhenumbhavyā and bhaksamkara are merely cases of a common formation in the Brahmana style, and the formation is not early. The roots kea and play are clearly not evidence; we cannot recognize in the former an earlier form as compared with khyā.2 dakṣiṇāt seems no more than a false form based on the analogy of savyāt and thrusting out the misunderstood daksinā of the Taittirīya texts. For çvovasīyasa the Taittirīya Brāhmana (ii. 2. 9. 10) has quovasyasá. The root thurv is no more than a bad reading, and the same remark applies to the creation of sanc by the Dhatupatha (vii. 22) from sañcati in i. 10. 20 and sacanti in the Kāthaka (xxxvi. 14). Still less happy is the citation of the accent of pati in cit- and vak-pati, for in this use, as in the case of ahar-pati, the older practice is against the oxytone accent; even the Vājasaneyi has ahar-, cit-, and vāk-páti, and it is not without importance that the Taittiriya Sanhitā (ii. 4. 6. 2), the Kāthaka (xiii. 16), and the Taittirīya Brāhmana (i. 6. 2. 2) agree in pústipati, while the later part of the Brahmana (iii. 1, 2. 9) has pustipati.3 The Kapisthala (i. 13) agrees with the Vājasaneyi, but the Kāthaka (xiv. 1) has vākpatí.

It would serve no useful purpose to deal in detail with the other cases alleged: not one has any validity, and in adducing them von Schroeder has not taken sufficient care to separate prose and verse, though the only comparison of value must be between the prose portions. Stigh is no doubt an old and genuine root, as $\sigma \tau \epsilon i \chi \omega$ proves, but its presence is no evidence of age in the work in which it is found. No one would argue that parttvá, if it is to be read in the Taittirīya (vii. 5. 1. 2) as derived from the root pard, would prove that the Taittirīya is older than the other Sanhitās. If the prose portions of the two Sanhitās are to be made out to be the oldest other means are necessary.

It is doubtful whether these means are available. There are, however, a few points of more validity than any adduced by von Schroeder. Firstly, the Sanhitā (i. 6. 9. 4) and the Brāhmaṇa in several places have dvandva as a neuter, and not merely as an adverb as in the Maitrāyaṇā (i. 7. 3) and the Kāṭhaka (ix. 1). The use as a neuter is found in the Aitareya and Catapatha Brāhmaṇas and is recognized by Kāṭyāyana and perhaps also by Pāṇini, viii. 1. 15.4 Secondly, in vii. 5. 8. 4 is found ékaikayā, as compared with ékayaíkayā, vi. 1. 9. 4, and in v. 1. 1. 2; 4. 5. 5 ékaikam in place of ékam ekam, i. 6, 8. 2. The Pada curiously restores the full forms, but the Prāticākhya (v. 18, 19) admits the contractions. It is not true as Whitney 1 and Wackernagel say 2 that ékaika, a common form in the Catapatha, first occurs here, for it is read in Atharvaveda, iii. 20. 1. where, however, it may be a mistake for ékā-ékayā as Whitney suggests in his translation, but it is not found in the Maitrayani parallel passages (iii. 1. 6; 3. 7), where nana occurs instead; on the other hand it is found in the Kāthaka (xviii, 19, ekaikena; xxi, 8, ekaikayā). Thirdly, in vii. 2. 8. 6 we find anyo'nyasya used as a genitive with chandansi as nominative, a construction for which we must go to such texts as the Brhadāranyaka Upanisad (i. 5. 30) for a parallel.3 It may be noted that this occurs in one of the passages which has no parallel in the other texts and is admittedly supplementary. But it should be added that there is a stepping-stone to such a use in vi. 4. 10. 1, where anyô'nyam refers to the rival sets of gods and Asuras, each plural, and is used with a plural verb. Fourthly, in ii. 4. 11. 1 is found usnihakakubhau as a Dyandya, and this Wackernagel 4 suggests may be a form derived from usnihākakubhau (Maitrayani, ii. 4. 4) under the influence of the parallel Bambaviçvavayásau which the Maitrayani has for Bambavicvavayasau of the Taittiriya. But the shortening of syllables is rather a feature of the Taittiriya, as in amāvāsyatvá (ii. 5. 3. 7), prthivitvá (vii. 1. 5. 1), vasatīvaritvá (vi. 4. 2. 1), carkaratvá (v. 2, 6, 2), samyānitvá (v. 3, 10, 1), ajatvá (vi. 1, 6, 3), ajaksīrá (ii. 2. 4. 4; v. 4. 3. 2), grīvadaghná (v. 6. 8. 3), pundarisrajá (i. 8. 18. 1). prthivisád (i. 7. 12. 1), senajít (iv. 4. 3. 2), senānigrāmanyaù (iv. 4. 3. 1). idaprajasah (i. 5. 6. 1), istakacit (i. 5. 8. 2). Fifthly, in vii. 3. 3. 1 occurs the first example of a three-member Dvandva, prānāpānodānésu, but this again is in a late portion of the Sanhitā. Sixthly, in i. 8. 7. 1 the dative cunāstrāya occurs as an epithet of Indra, but this is merely a form borrowed from the double deity Cunasira and not a clear case of a masculine singular Dvandva, which is an occasional form in the Upanisads and later careless language: more important is the case of uksavaca if it in ii. 1. 2, 6 denotes a Dvandva as is possible but by no means certain.6 Seventhly, in vii. 5. 6. 4 the forms yathayatanam and yathayatanat suggest the use of later forms with yathā nominally,7 but this is a late section of the Sanhitā and the ablative is a natural development of the use of the adverbial accusative.

On the other hand, the general texture of the language of the three Sanhitas is absolutely the same. In the restricted use of the periphrastic perfect. in the precise use of the periphrastic future, in the uses of the moods and tenses there is practically no difference. If the Taittiring does not use aha with the dative infinitive as does the Maitrayant (i. 4. 10; ii. 2. 2) the Maitrayani has no case of dhr with the infinitive as in the Taittiriva (vi. 5, 9, 1).3 The use of narrative tenses in the Maitrayani is overwhelmingly that of the imperfect, Whitney 4 counts 2237 imperfects to 35 perfects, and of these three at least (i. 5. 8; 7. 3) are probably presents; the rest occur as a rule in groups of two or three, once four (ii. 5. 1; iii, 2, 7: 3, 2, 9: iv, 2, 10: 6, 6), but sometimes isolated (i, 4, 12; iii, 1, 3; 2, 3; 3, 9; 6, 5; iv. 6, 2) or occasionally with imperfects (i. 6, 13, where a first singular perfect is quoted among imperfects), iii, 2, 8; iv, 2, 2, 6; 5, 4. These figures accord accurately with those of the Taittirina, viz. 1900 to 27. though those of the Taittirina are even more easily explained away. The Kāthaka 5 reveals the same features; the narrative perfect is very rare and nearly always motived: in all cases the start of the usage is uvaca with its double sense of a past speech and a persisting dictum. The greater part (i. 1-iii. 9) of the Taittiriya Brāhmana (1426 imperfects to 25 perfects) is on the same level, and the Aranyaka (i, ii, v) with 136 imperfects to 4 perfects is not far different considering the smallness of numbers. In the Aitareya Brāhmana the first five books present 929 imperfects to 27 perfects, while the last three have 151 imperfects to 239 perfects, and in this case the obvious argument for later dating of vi-viii is supported by evidence of content and other grammatical proof.6

(b) The Aitareya Brāhmaṇa.

The case of the relation of the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa to the Taittirīya is of special interest. The two texts show, especially in the case of the sixth book of the Taittirīya a great similarity, as Aufrecht 7 pointed out. Thus in the Aitareya, i. 1. 4 may be compared with vi. 2, 2, 6; 3, 5 with vi. 1, 1, 4; 3, 9, 10 with vi. 1, 2, 1; 3, 11 with vi. 2, 5, 5; 3, 15, 16 with vi. 1, 3, 2; 7, 3 with vi. 1, 5, 1; 10, 2 with vi. 1, 5, 3; 11, 1 with vi. 1, 5, 3; 13, 35 with ii. 5, 7, 1; 14, 1 with vi. 2, 1, 1; 15, 2 with vi. 2, 1, 2; 16, 1, 20 with vi. 3, 5, 3; 19, 11 with vi. 1, 1, 8; 21, 15 with vi. 1, 6, 2; 23, 1 with vi. 2, 3, 1; 25, 2 with vi. 2, 3, 1; 25, 4 with vi. 2, 5, 2; 26, 1 with ii. 6, 1, 5; 26, 3 with vi. 2, 2, 4; 27, 1 with vi. 1, 6, 5; 10, 4. In book ii, 1, 1 is similar to vi. 3, 4, 7;

In iii compare 15. 1 with ii. 5. 3, 6; 21. 1 with vi. 5. 5. 3; 28. 1 with vi. 1. 6. 2; in iv, 15. 1 and 16. 1 are like vii. 4. 11. 1; in v, 6. 5 is like v. 3. 8. 1, and the legend of Nabhanedistha in 14. 2 is similar to that in iii. 1. 9. 4; see also 22. 5 and vii. 3. 1. 1.

Aufrecht's view is thus briefly given:1 'Von viel grösserer Bedeutung ist, dass allem Anschein nach bereits die Taittiriyasamhitä das Aitareya benutzt hat.' The evidence for or against this view is not altogether decisive in most of the parallels: it is open to say much on either side, and, as he points out, the imitation, if it exists, is not so much verbal as imitation of substance. Thus, for instance, the Nabhanedistha legend takes very different forms in the two texts, for in one case Manu is to blame for the disregarding of Nābhānedistha, in the other his sons; both agree in the parts played by the Angirases and Rudra in the curious drama. But special importance attaches to the Aitareya, i. 3. 19, 20: musti kurute mustī vai krtvā garbho 'ntak cete mustī kumāro jāyate tad yan mustī kurute yajñam caiva sarvāç ca devatā mustyok kurute. The use of mustyok is suggestive of the origin of the phrase musti kurute, which is found in this form in musti kurute, vi. 1. 4. 3. In iii. 39. 5 occurs the proverb sudhāyām ha vai vājī suhito dadhāti; while in the Taittiriya (v. 5. 10. 7) is found sudhayam ha vaí väjt súhíto dadhāti. The word sudhayam is treated by the St. Petersburg Dictionary as equivalent to sudhā, but the text is probably a mere blunder as Weber2 suggests; sudhā is found also in Atharvaveda, xvii. 1. 6 and Catapatha Brāhmana, ii. 2. 2. 6. In iv. 17. 1-3 it is said of the cows that after performing a year's Sattra, acraddhayā crāgāni prāvartanta tā etās tūparāh, where Sayana renders cirassv acraddhayā crāgāni na prāvartanta notpannānīty arthah. In the Taittiriya (vii. 5. 2. 1, 2) the same tale is told and the passage runs, tásam dvadacé masí chagani právartanta craddháya vácraddhaya va tá imā yās tūparāh. This passage, like that of the Aitareya,3 is sheer nonsense as it stands, and the probabilities of borrowing are in favour of the originality of the Aitareya, for it reads with the insertion of na or the easy change of crngani to acrngani (a mere matter of Sandhi) as perfect sense, whereas the Taittiriya cannot be mended by a mere insertion of na; the use of the phrase craddháyā vácraddhayā vā seems secondary.

and certainly the phrase ta ima yas tuparah is peculiarly helpless; in the Aitareya the sense is 'through their lack of faith the horns were not produced; these then are the hornless ones', but the Taittiriya reads only 'in the twelfth month their horns were born, whether by faith or not; these are those which are hornless'. The Aitareya continues ūrjam tv asunvan tasmād u tāh sarvān rtūn prāptvottaram uttisthanti, where the tu accords good sense. In the Taittiriya, on the other hand, we find ubháryo váva tá ardhnuvan yác ca cŕngany ásanvan yác córjam avárundhata: nothing has been said before the winning of strength, and the whole can only be explained by the use of an older source. In the Pañcavinça Brāhmana (iv. 1. 2) we read, after the same introduction telling how the cows had horns in ten months, that some decided to perform the whole year's Sattra, tāsām dvādaçasu māssu çrāgāni prāvartanta tāh sarvam annādyam āpņuvais tā etās tūparās tasmāt tās sarvān dvādaça māsah prerate sarvam hi tā annādyam āpnuvan. Here Sāyana suggests that prāvartanta means 'fell off' (prāpatan, not prāpayat as in the text of the Bibliotheca Indica). If this sense could be accepted, still the Taittiriya would be the later version, since its craddhayā vācraddhayā vā can only be due to lack of understanding of the passage, and the Pañcavinça version would be equally later, since dvādaçasu māssu does not naturally denote the fact that 'in the twelfth month (or eleventh and twelfth) ' the horns fell off. The sense, however, of pra-vrt as 'fall off' is too forced to be natural, and the conclusion is unavoidable that the original sense is given by the Aitareya, which the other two texts 1 have followed, omitting the na which once possibly was read, or misunderstanding açrügäni, or açraddhayā if it means, as taken by Böhtlingk and Roth (v. 770), 'not real' horns, but mere protuberances.

It should be added that Böhtlingk and Roth consider that asunvan is a mere blunder for asanvan, which does occur in the Taittirīya. This, however, seems to be an error; su is used here in the sense of 'impel', 'produce', for the form of 1 su and 2 su cannot be as sharply distinguished as done in the Dictionary. The change to asanvan is so easy and natural that the reading of the Taittirīya cannot be preferred to that of the Aitareya. There is a similar question as to the Jaiminīya Upaniṣad Brāhmana, i. 50. 4.

This case seems to me conclusive for the priority of the Aitareya (i-v) over the Taittiriya in the Brāhmana portions. Some confirmation of this may be seen in the fact that there seems to be no parallels for the Taittiriya in books vi-viii of the Aitareya, which are admittedly later in origin.

Pañcarinça unlikely; see Keith, Astareya Aranyaka, p. 172.

(c) The Pancavinca Brāhmana.

The relations between the Sanhitā and the Pancavinca Brāhmana are in some cases unquestionably very close. Thus in the Pañcavinça, v. 9. 8-14, there is a chapter on the date of the consecration for the sacrificial session, the Gavam Ayana, which in substance is identical and in wording very closely parallel with the Sanhita, vii. 4. 8, the use of the same phrases proving beyond doubt that either both texts have followed a common source or that there is borrowing; the passage itself does not allow of any decision, the Pańcavinca has sammeghe for the Taittiriya såmmeghye, and kalyani vak for kalyani kirtih, while it has sattrinah for yájamānāh, but nothing decisive can be made out of these variants in an otherwise closely identical passage. The parallelism of Pancavinca, iv. 1. 1-3. 7 with vii. 5. 1, 2 has been touched on above, and in this case there is no criterion of age, inasmuch as both versions seem derived from the Aitareya, iv. 17. In Pañcavinça, ix. 4. 1-18; 5. 1; 2. 9, 10 there is a parallel to the Sanhitā, vii. 5. 5. In v. 10. 1-11 there is some similarity to the Sanhita, vii. 5. 7. Pancavinça, v. 3. 1-5. 21, 6. 8-15, contains an account of the peculiarities of the Mahavrata; this is much fuller than that of the Taittiriya, vii. 5. 7-9, which seems to have been borrowed from it. The Kāthaka which also shows many similarities with the Bañeavinca follows it much more closely in xxxiv, 5. The account of the Avivākya day in Pancavinça, iv. 8. 8; 9. 4-12 is similar to that in the Sankitā, vii. 3. 1, and that of the Dacarātra in xxii. 14 to the Sankitā. vii. 2. 5. More important is the fact that the Ahinas in the Sanhita, vii. 1. 4-9, are all paralleled in the Pancavinça (xx. 11; 14-16; xxi. 1; 9. 2; 10. 5-10). Apparently in one case at least, the Taittiriya simplifies, as it has in vii. 1. 9. 1 palitaú Jamadagniyau for Aureau, this being the easier to understand as the Jamadagni is the subject of the section. The Pańcavinca, beside keeping Aurvau, introduces the saying na vā Aurvau palitau samjānāte as a quotation, whereas the Taittiriya abbreviates it to a mere statement of fact, given rather abruptly. When it is remembered that the account of the Sattras and Ahinas is essentially a supplement to the Taittiriya, and that in the Kathaka there are parallels only to part of it, and in the Maitrayani none, and in the Catapatha only a late (xii) book deals with part of the material, it is very probable that the relation here is one of dependence on the Paūcavinca, nor is there any room for doubt that this is also true of the Kāṭhaka which shows in part still closer correspondence. Moreover, vii is certainly the latest part of the Saṅhitā.

It is, of course, no objection to this view that there is some reason for supposing with Hopkins 1 that in vi. 1. 6 we have an earlier version of the legend of Kadru and Suparni, the Gayatri, and the Gandharva Viçvavasu than that presented in two passages of the Pancavinca, viii. 4. 1-4; vi. 9. 22. It is also possible that in the Pancavinça, xiii. 6. 10, the application to Sumitra's ill-doing of the words sumitrah san krūram akar is borrowed from the story of Mitra in the Sanhitā, vi. 4. 8. 1, mitráh sán krūrám akar. Nor is it at all unlikely that the statement of the Pañcavinça, xx. 16. 3, regarding the Sattras of Para Atnara and three others, was borrowed from v. 6. 5. 3, where these men are celebrated for their piling of the fire. The Taittiriya has a parallel in the Kathaka (xxii. 3)2 and that the connexion is originally with the Agnicayana is probable. Both versions are probably earlier than the notice of the Jaiminiya Upanisad Brāhmana (ii. 6. 11) where Para, Trasadasyu, and Kaksivant appear as pūrve mahārājāh grotriyāh, a description which seems unauthorized as applied at any rate to Kakşīvant.3 The mention of eight Vīras in the Pañcavinça (xix. 1. 4) as against the larger list of Ratnins in the Taittiriya (i. 8. 9) is inconclusive.4 The Taittirīya (vi.2.6) has a parallel to its talpe in the vivāhe of the Kāthaka (xxv. 3), and from these the Pancavinca seems to have contaminated its inclusion of both talpe and vivahe in an unintelligible contrast in xxiii. 4.2.

In general the early nature of the Paūcavinça is maintained by good evidence: it has 6 only 11 perfects to 1433 imperfects, and of these four (x. 5. 7; xii. 13. 11; xiii. 4. 11; xiv. 1. 12) gave the dictum of a sage (uvāca), and one of the others (xiii. 6. 9) is used to differentiate the time from the imperfects in the passage: the others (xxiv. 18. 2; xxv. 6. 5; 10. 18) are less easy to explain.

(d) The Kauşītaki Brāhmana.

There are only a few parallels of any interest with the Kauṣītaki Brāh-maṇa. The legend of Vasiṣṭha's slain sons is told in similar terms in the Kauşītaki, iv. 8, and in the Sanhitā, vii. 4. 7, and the latter appears the more original. In vii. 4. 8 the discussion of the time of the Dîkṣā may be compared with that in the Kauṣītaki, xix. 2, 3, and there can be little doubt that the former is also the earlier. With this agrees the fact that the Kauṣītaki is certainly later than the Aitareya; it has 149 perfects to 263 imperfects, and its whole content bears out the other evidence of comparative date.

(e) The Catapatha Brāhmana.

The Catapatha Brahmana is admittedly on the whole the most recent of the great Brahmana texts: Yājñavalkya is a teacher bordering on the Upanisad period, and there is little doubt that the Brahmana with its clear distinction from the Sanhitā is the product of a distinct attempt to improve on the confused form of the Black Yajurveda texts, doubtless as Eggeling 3 neatly suggests on the analogy of the Brahmanas attached to the Raveda. It is true that it contains in its mass a good deal of older material, as is shown by the appearance 4 in vi-ix (the Agnicayana) of a predominating use of imperfects in narration (1504 to 148 perfects) as compared with the proportions found in i-v (1107 to 941 perfects), but it is not doubtful that the first nine books were redacted at one time into a whole, to which x (319 to 106), xi (198 to 258), xii (123 to 65), xiii (132 to 26), and xiv (250 to 337) were later added. Its richness of content and completeness are signs of later age, and it indulges frequently in polemics against the Carakas, a thing to which there is no parallel of any sort in the Taittirīya Sankitā. It is reasonable therefore to assign the former text to a later period than the Brahmana parts of the Sanhita, as is usually done.

The only objection to this course is that presented by Hertel's argument from the term Aida, used of Purūravas, which he traces back to a deity at once male and female, known as Ida. Traces of this Ida he sees in the epithet idāprajas as used with mānavī of prajā in a line of the Taittirīya (i. 5. 6. 1) and the Maitrāyanī (i. 5. 3, 10), though the Kāthaka in one place (vii. 1) has idāprajas and in one (vii. 8) idāprajas. In the Catapatha (i. 8. 1. 6 seq.) the Idā is made the daughter of Manu to explain a misunderstood ritual expression, and from that blunder the other passages where Idā is connected with Manu are all derived, viz. Sankitā, i. 7. 1. 3; Kāthaka, viii. 4; Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa, i. 1. 4. 4; Maitrāyanī, i. 6. 13, though these versions do not say that Idā was Manu's daughter. In

ii. 6. 7. 3 the Sanhitā actually explains the ritual expressions (mānavī, ghṛtapadī, and maitrāvarunī), which misled the Catapatha, in a perfectly different manner. I am unable, however, to see any force in this argument, for it rests on the view that idāprajas is really 'descended from Iḍā', a male, whereas, as has been seen above, the natural and simple explanation of idā is that it is one of the not rare shortenings in compounds of which ajakṣīra is a good case and a good parallel. More serious, however, is the fact that the theory of Iḍā as a dual personality, a strīpumān, is based only on the notices of the Mahābhārata and the Purāṇas, and their authority cannot possibly be adequate to show that the idea is really Vedic.\(^1\) Still more important is the fact that in every passage where idā occurs it can perfectly well be taken merely in the ordinary sense, and it is quite impossible on any reasonable theory to find a trace of time relation in the versions mentioned above.

(f) The Gopatha Brāhmaņa.

In its wholesale borrowings the Gopatha has naturally not spared the Taittiriya. Thus the rule that only one of the two full or new moon days should be chosen for the new and full moon sacrifice is copied (ii. 1. 11) verbatim, and in the text of the edition with many errors, from the Saühitā (ii. 5. 5). Similarly ii. 1. 4 corresponds with Saühitā ii. 6. 9; the Tanūnaptra (ii. 2. 2-4) borrows from vi. 2. 2, the Stomabhāga (ii. 2. 13) from iii. 5. 2. 1; the account of the burning of the Vedi (ii. 4. 8) is based in all probability on iii. 3. 8. 2, while the next section (ii. 4. 9) on the Ekāṣṭakā is based on the Brāhmaṇa (iii. 4. 8. 4-6), which it continues. The Gopatha is certainly the latest 3 of the Brāhmaṇas, and its dependence on the Taittirīya is, naturally enough, less than its dependence on the Aitareya, Kauṣītaki, and Catapatha Brāhmaṇas.

§ 8. THE RITUAL.

The details of the ritual are not given to us in the Brahmana portions of the text, which assume that they are known, and the Sūtras cannot be regarded as preserving any tradition of absolute validity, in view of the fact that they constantly differ in detail. The nearest approach to the Sūtra style is contained in a few passages where there are given mere lists of victims with the deities to which they are offered, but these passages are rare and exceptional in the Sanhitā. Hillebrandt 4 considers that there must have been early in existence manuals, of which the later Prayogas are the descendants, giving an intelligible summary of the practices, the Sütras being scientific variations of these early Prayogas. This is not necessarily the case,1 but it has some support from the character of the Baudhayana Crauta Sūtra which describes the sacrifice with a fullness of detail and quotation which is quite different from the normal Sütra character and which in certain parts is more or less Brahmana-like in style.

It will probably never be possible to determine with certainty the actual rites which the Mantras were intended to accompany when the Saihitā was composed, and still less, of course, the actual original use of the Mantras. The Sūtras normally give possible uses and doubtless follow adequately the main lines of the sacrifice, and when they agree they may be taken to represent what was probably an early form of the ritual.

The main divisions of the Indian sacrifice in the Vedic period are those between the Grhya and the Crauta sacrifices which presume the use of the three fires. The use of the three fires is earlier than the Rgveda, as Oldenberg shows,2 and it is very possible that it is originally derived from the Soma ritual which insists on their use, while the Agnihotra and the new and full moon sacrifices still could be performed by the householder with his single fire. It is not probable that the fires represent a combination of the rituals of different families as Ludwig 4 thought; they are rather the results of priestly elaboration. The Garhapatya remains the source of the other two, the Ahavaniya, in which offerings are normally made, and the Daksināgni, which receives offerings for dread spirits like the Manes, as at the Sākamedhas and the monthly offerings to the Manes, while it also serves with its heat and light to repel the evil spirits, the Raksases.

(a) The Haviryojñas.

The establishing of the fires is not, curiously enough, dealt with in the Sanhitā, but in the Taittirīya Brāhmana,5 but the Punarādheya is mentioned: it is not a normal act, but necessary if the first fires do not achieve the desired end, when it is no doubt to be concluded that they are deficient in purity or some essential quality.

With these fires fall to be performed the offerings of the morning and evening, the Agnihotra, which may, as Oldenberg s supposes, have been originally no more than the due tending of the fire and not a real sacrifice:

the morning rite is clearly also a sun-spell to help the sun to perform its essential function of rising.¹ More important by far is the offering at new and at full moon, which occupies a substantial place in the Sanhitā.² The ritual has been elaborated to include as many gods as possible, and it is characteristic that Agni and Soma are given the same position at full moon as Agni and Indra at new moon, a clear sign of later speculation, possibly due to the growing tendency to see the moon in Soma. The new moon and the second half of the month are the times of the monthly offering to the Pitrs, and these monthly rites must have been in fact the most important of the ordinary ritual.

Curiously enough, the Sanhitā treats very briefly the Cāturmāsya rites, which are of considerable importance and bear marks of a popular origin. The Maruts are prominent, and they are the deities of the folk. The use of Karīra fruits at the second, the rainy season offering, is clearly, as in the Kārīrāṣṭi, a rain-spell, and the Maitrāyanā Sanhitā (i. 10. 12) expressly says that the use of the fruit is for rain and the winning of food. The ritual shows also clear signs of a practice to increase the procreation of the flocks, and contains a remarkable sin-offering, in which the wife of the sacrificer is made to confess her lovers, if any, and is then with her husband purified from the sin. In the case of the third offering in the cold season is found an offering to the Pitṛs, possibly as Oldenberg thinks, the remains of an Indo-European winter all souls feast. Then comes an offering to Tryambaka intended to avert his anger and to save the lives of the worshippers and of their cattle. His portion is placed in a mole-heap, and eventually the remnants of the offering are hung up in two baskets for Rudra.

To these offerings is attached, curiously enough, another, the Çunăsīrīya. It is connected in the Kauṣītaki Brāhmana (v. 1) with the thirteenth month, but it clearly has nothing whatever to do with it. It is, according to Oldenberg, an offering to the geniuses of the plough to secure its good working.7

The animal sacrifice in the Sanhitā is scattered in the section dealing with the new and full moon rite, the Soma sacrifice, and its supplement, 10 and the Agnicayana, in connexion with which an animal victim is normally necessary. Moreover, in certain cases there are optional animal sacrifices to which a section (ii. 1) is entirely devoted. The normal type in the Sanhitā is not, as later, the Nirūdhapaçu, but the goat for Agni and Soma, offered on the day preceding the Sutyā or pressing-day of the Soma sacrifice.

The animal sacrifice has been fully considered by Schwab in Das altindische Thieropfer, and he came to the conclusion that normally and properly the essence of the rite was a gift-offering: man supplies the god with the food he finds most strengthening to procure the favour of the gods. Oldenberg, in substance, agrees with the view, but he justly emphasizes two further points in the theory. In the first place the animal offered may be offered with a special view to secure strength for the sacrificer, as in the horse sacrifice, and in the sacrifice of an ass to Nirrti by him who has broken a vow of chastity and desires thus to regain what he has wasted; in the second place the god should receive as far as may be the strength of the beast of which he sometimes takes the form; the bull is offered to Indra who is himself often conceived as theriomorphic and so forth.

Besides this theory—and Oldenberg does not do more than hint at the possibility of totemism as a cause in some cases of the offering—there is one, accepted by Ludwig and by Eggeling amongst others, which recognizes the animal sacrifice as a redemption of self. This is certainly the view expressed here and there in the Sanhitās, especially in the accounts of the substitution of the various victims for each other and finally for man. But it seems no more than an absurdity if closely pressed: it assumes that man's chief end is to sacrifice himself to his god rather than to propitiate his god for worldly gain. Can it be doubted which is the earlier of the two conceptions? The growth of the redemption idea is a most natural one, but it is not a primitive conception, and characteristically it meets us in the later texts, not in the Rgveda, that is, at a time when the sacrifice had become the object of priestly thought and speculation.

It is characteristic of the offering that the blood is assigned to the Raksases and not used in worship of the high gods as normally in Greek ritual.⁸ In the Taittiriya Sanhitā in one passage (i. 4. 36)⁹ it is assigned to Rudra, but this is unusual, though very probably the fear of the blood is a later development. The blood is essentially the living part and either can be treated as efficacious (as in the Greek purification ritual by blood) or as too full of divinity through contact with the god for the use of the sacrificer.

The flesh of the victim was in part offered as a burnt-offering, in part eaten by the priests, who were not, of course, vegetarians. Oldenberg lays stress on the fact that the omentum was specially offered first as a burnt-offering, and he is probably right in seeing in this a proof of the view that the gods could in one form best enjoy food in the smoke of the offering, a fact which is no doubt part of the cause of the ritual use of fire, though in part the fire is also a strong purifying power.

As often, the victim is to be slain with as little of ill omen as possible; thus it should not be allowed to utter a sound, and the Mantras assure it that it is not really being killed, a tendency seen already in the Rgveda (i. 162. 21). Are we to see in this peculiarity a sign of any special relationship of beast and god, of any real unity of substance between them? In particular, does this show a totemistic conception? Or is the victim an embodiment of the corn-spirit?

In the first place it must be noted that there is nothing here which really makes us see any such high position assigned to the beast which dies. The participators in the rite, so far as may be, turn their backs on its death struggles, but the beast is after all not merely a thing in itself apt as an angry spirit to be dangerous, but also it is unquestionably on the sacred ground filled with the divine spirit and its slaying is therefore a thing of dread. It must be slain to be offered, but the slaying itself is not attractive. There is in the second place no trace in the Vedic ritual of what would be necessary to prove the deity of the animal, the treatment of it as such independently of its position on the altar. Later indeed the cow becomes a present deity to the Hindu, but that is not an early or universal Vedic conception.

It remains, however, of interest to consider how far the Vedic religion recognizes the two forms of sacramental communion which are seen in Homeric cult, 5 viz. the common eating of the priests and the god, and the desire to eat things which have been brought into contact with the altar and so are half divine, as seems meant in the phrases $o\dot{\nu}\lambda o\chi\dot{\nu}\tau as\ \pi\rho\rho\beta\dot{a}\lambda\sigma\nu\tau\sigma$ and $\sigma\pi\lambda\dot{a}\gamma\chi\nu'$ $\dot{\epsilon}\pi\dot{a}\sigma\sigma\nu\tau\sigma$. We have seen that the priests regularly taste the offering, but there is no clear evidence that their tasting was a common feast with the god, or still less a feast with the god on that which the god had entered in his own spirit. The possibility of a communion is, of course, clearly present, its actual existence is by no means shown by the texts. If they were aware of it they have not recorded the fact, and we see no trace of the sacramental communion in the religion of Babylonia, although there also the priests ate part of the offering.1 Oldenberg,2 who has most carefully studied the whole problem from the point of view of Robertson Smith's theory 3 of the derivation of the gift-offering from the sacramental, denies that any trace of it is to be found, and prolonged search only confirms this view. The rite is full of references to the power that falls to the oblation and fills it and renders its taste and touch desirable but ignores the union of the god with men in the rite. It may therefore be that the sacramental meal is a specifically Mediterranean conception which the Homeric age borrowed from a non-Aryan faith, a hypothesis perfectly reasonable in itself. It is noteworthy that the later and probably the earlier ritual alike allow only the sacrificer who is a Brahman to eat of the offering, even as only the priests eat it in the Babylonian ritual. The communion sacrifice does not impose any such restriction, which is perfectly in place when the sacrifice is regarded as a dangerous potency as filled with the godlike power, and thus fit only for consumption, whether vegetable or animal or Soma, by the priests.

(c) The Vajapeya.

The Vājapeya is classed in the ritual as one of the forms of the Soma sacrifice, and it has the peculiarity that it is normally performed as an independent rite. It appears in the Taittirīya before the Rājasūya, and it occupies the same order in the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā (îx, x) and the Catapatha Brāhmaṇa (v), and doubtless Eggeling is right in attributing this fact to its peculiar characteristics which give it a decidedly popular tinge.

Considered from the point of view of the ritual the Vājapeya is a special form of the Sodaçin, that form of the Soma sacrifice which adds to the fifteen Stotras and Çastras of the Ukthya a sixteenth Stotra and Çastra, and a third victim, a ram for Indra. The Vājapeya has above these a new Stotra, the Vājapeya Sāman, chanted to the Brhat tune, in the Saptadaça Stoma and followed by the recitation of the Vājapeya Çastra. The Saptadaça Stoma is used in the Ārbhavapavamāna, Mādhyamdina, and Bahispavamāna Stotras at the evening, midday, and morning pressings in place of the forms normal in these cases in the Agnistoma, viz. a different form of Saptadaça, the Pañcadaça, and the Trivrt. This rite adds also a fourth victim, for Sarasvatī, and a set of seventeen for Prajāpati.

The exact nature of the Vajapeya is somewhat obscure. The Catapatha Brāhmana (v. 1) sets out to show that the Vajapeya is a ceremony of greater importance than the Rajasuya, and following in this track Katyayana (xv. 1. 1, 2) declares that the Rajasūya can be performed before the performance of the Vājapeya by a king, though neither the Brāhmana nor the Sūtra requires that the Rājasūya should necessarily be performed at all, the Vājapeya being apparently a more than sufficient equivalent. But the Rājasūya can only be performed by a king on whom it confers kingship (rājya), while the Vājapeya can be performed by a Brahman and it confers paramount sovereignty (sāmrājya). But this view is not at all in accordance with the Taittiriya Sanhitä (v. 6. 2. 1) or the Taittiriya Brahmana (ii. 7. 6, 1), which treat the Vajapeva as a samratsava or consecration to the dignity of a paramount sovereign, while the Rajasuya is a Varunasava, conferring the universal authority of Varuna himself. The Latyayana Crauta Sūtra (viii. 11, 1) prescribes the Vājapeya for whomever the Brahmans and Rājans may place at their head. Açvalāyana (ix. 9. 19) lays down the rule that the Vājapeya is intended as a preliminary rite to be followed in the case of a king by the Rajasuya and in that of a Brahman by the Brhaspatisava, the actual installation and consecration ceremony, and this view is not inconsistent with what the Pañcavinça Brāhmana (xvii. 11. 5, 6) and Latyayana (viii. 7. 4) tell us of the latter rite. The Catapatha Brāhmana (v. 2. 1. 19) evades the difficulty by identifying the Brhaspatisava and the Vājapeva, and the Kātyāyana Crauta Sūtra (xiv. 1.2) combines the two, which it distinguishes elsewhere (xxii. 5. 29), by making the performer of the Vajapeya perform the other rite for a fortnight before and after.

Hillebrandt laid stress on the importance of the chariot race of the ritual and compared the whole to the Olympic games, and Weber has asserted that the whole aim of the rite was the feast of victory of the winner in the chariot race, and he lays stress on the statement of the $C\bar{a}\bar{n}kh\bar{a}yana$ Crauta Sūtra (xvi. 17. 4) which permits the employment of the rite in the case of a Vaiçya, and not merely as in the other texts for the cases of a Brahman and a Kṣatriya. Vājapeya as a name he interprets accordingly as meaning the 'Schutz' of strength, deriving peya from $p\bar{a}$, 'protect', not as usual from $p\bar{a}$, 'drink'. But for this last suggestion the evidence is not sufficient. There is, he argues, in the ritual no trace of a drink in connexion with the rite. But this is clearly not the case; the Vājapeya is essentially, as we have it, a Soma rite, and the drinking of Soma is a part of it, and in the priestly view the most essential part.

Ueber den Väjapeya, p. 10. Cf. the theory of Frazer (The Dying God, pp. 90-104) as to the origin of the Olympic games, which is, however, very improbable.

The term Vāja, however, in the sense of 'strength' is undoubtedly old and as a living word confined to the ritual Mantras, and in a minor degree to Brāhmaṇa passages based on them.¹ Moreover, the ancient character of the rite is assured by the fact that the Mantras for it are nearly identical in all the Sanhitās of the Yajurveda,² and the few formulae found in Çānkhāyana and Lāṭyāyana show a close correspondence. But the rite thus depicted is essentially already a priestly one; the original rite may in its popular form have been intended in honour of Indra alone, but the priests have placed Brhaspati in honour, and the Brāhmaṇa explanations agree in seeing in the characteristic number 'seventeen' the analogue of the seventeenfold Prajāpati. But in sacerdotalizing the rite the priests have still retained its popular features, which makes its inclusion as a form of the Soma sacrifice obviously a secondary one.

The popular features are chiefly these. (1) There is a race of seventeen chariots in which the sacrificer is victorious. The purpose of this rite is doubtless, as stated by Oldenberg,3 to secure for the sacrificer by magic the swiftness of the victorious steeds as strength. (2) The sacrificer with his wife mounts on a chariot wheel, obviously a symbol of the sun, which is placed on the top of a long pole.4 The joint action of the two is significant of the popular character of the rite, and the act is again a magic device to secure the exaltation of the sacrificer. (3) After his descent from the pole the sacrificer is anointed and proclaimed as victor. The anointing is intended to confer on him the power of the oblation which is used for the anointing. (4) Before his descent the priests of his people touch him with bags of salt earth in Acvattha leaves or in Acvattha boxes, clearly as a means of securing fertility,5 showing that the offering is more than a mere piece of magic for the glorification of any individual person. With this is in harmony the insistence of the Cankhayana (xv. l. l) on the fact that the rite is available to any one who desires annadya, and the name is explained as ' food and drink', a version found in the Catapatha itself. Moreover, this accords with the Mantras used in touching the sacrificer, annaya tva, &c., and the rule in Çankhayana (xvi. 17. 4) that the offering can be made for a Vaiçya, to which may be added the consecration of the sacrificer for kṛṣi in the Vājasaneyi (ix. 22 d) and possibly the connexion of the Maruts, the 'people among the gods', 'with the rite. The Cāākhāyana (xv. 3.7) and the Lāṭyāyana (viii. 11. 17) Crauta Sūtras name a Kuruvājapeya with a modest set of Dakṣiṇās, seventeen of each object, and this may be taken as another proof of age and popular character. Moreover, Lāṭyāyana (viii. 12. 1) demands that the sacrificer should follow the kṣatravṛtti, which Weber deems to be a reference to his winning the laurels of a warrior by his prowess in the race, but this interpretation is a little far-fetched. Hillebrandt has a more tenable hypothesis, namely that the reference shows that the sacrifice was properly one for a gataçrī, i.e. a cuçruvān brāhmaṇa, a rājanya, or grāmaṇī, the latter being the height of a Vaiçya's ambition. As a result the man who has offered the Vājapeya does not rise in respect for any other man nor address him in greeting according to Lāṭyāyana (viii. 12. 2).

There are two minor points of interest: the ritual prescribes the use of seventeen Sură cups in addition to the ordinary Soma cups: it is possible that this usage is a trace of the older popular character of the rite, but it would be dangerous to insist too much on this aspect of the rite, for Oldenberg considers that in its use both at the Sautrāmanī and the Vājapeya the use of Surā is a merely sacerdotal invention, though he by no means excludes the possibility of its use in a primitive form of the rite. Secondly, the anointing of the victor takes place either with milk and water mixed, or, according to some, with all the seventeen libations, or again with all but one, of which he never again partakes in his life, a curious taboo.

(d) The Rājasūya.

In the ritual texts the Rājasūya is an offer of great complication extending over two years, the centre being the Abhiṣecanīya day, when the actual anointing of the king took place. It begins on the 1st of Phālguna, and the Abhyārohaṇiya and other libations, including on the 8th those to Anumati, &c., occupy the first half-month. Then follows a year of offerings, including the Cāturmāsya offerings, the Mahāpitṛyajña, the cake for Tryambaka, and ending on the next 1st of Phālguna with the Çunāsīrya rite. Then follow on the same and the next two days offerings to the deities of the quarters, to the sets of three deities, and on the 4th to the 15th the twelve Ratninām Havīnṣi. On Caitra 1 begins the Abhiṣecanīya, with the offerings to the Devasūs, the preparation of the waters of all kinds for the consecration, and the proclaiming before the consecration of the prince to the gods and to the people. In this rite of characteristic importance is the Digvyāsthāpana, the mounting of the king on the quarters, with which Hillebrandt¹ compares the rite adopted by the King of Hungary as late as the enthronement of Francis Joseph in 1867. The king steps on a tigerskin, below which is a piece of lead representing the head of Namuci, on which he then tramples. He then performs a mimic raid with his chariot, the details of which are variously given, but which clearly represents the submission of his fellow princes and the racceptance of a place of inferiority, which is marked by the homage all pay him. Before this mimic raid he is formally anointed, and at that point or later the Ākhyāna of Çunaḥçepa is said to have its place, a fact in which Hillebrandt² needlessly sees a human sacrifice reporded. A game of dice of a symbolic character expressing the king's success is also recorded in somewhat unintelligible detail, especially by Baudhāyana.³

The Abhişecanîya is followed by the preparations for the Daçapeya, the offerings called Sańsspāin Havînşi taking the place of the Dīkṣā. The Daçapeya itself is a curious and probably once independent rite, in which ten priests each drink from ten cups, each having an ancestry of ten Soma drinkers, himself included in the counting. It begins on the seventh day of Caitra. Then follow in varying order in the different texts offerings to propitiate the quarters, offers to the Sātyadūtas, and the Prayujām Havīnṣi, and a Sautrāmaṇī of a special kind concludes the rite in the Taittirīya Saṅhitā (i. 8. 21). In other accounts the Sautrāmaṇī is preceded by the Keçavapanīya day, a year after the Daçapeya, when the king's hair, hitherto allowed to grow, and, according to Lātyāyana, that of the whole people, is cut short, two Vyuṣṭi days, an Agniṣṭoma and an Atirātra, a fortnight later, and the Ksatradhrti, a month later.

Though the Rājasūya is full of interesting magic rites,⁵ and though it has a wide range of parallels in the consecration rites of all coronations, there is little that need be said in addition to Weber's elaborate account of its character. The important feature of the whole is the fact that the king is sharply distinguished from the priests: the proclamation tells the people that so-and-so is their king, but the Brahmans add that their king is Soma. The distinction shows that for Vedic India at least the connexion of royalty with priestly rank, if it ever had been a motive of the growth of the kingship, had long disappeared before the time of the Sanhitas.

It is of interest to note that the list of those given in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (viii. 21-23) as having been consecrated (the term mahābhiṣeka is used) corresponds roughly with that given in the Catapatha Brāhmaṇa (xiii. 5. 4) and the Cānkhāyana Crauta Sūtra (xvi. 9) as the list of those who performed the Açvamedha, which, we shall see, is a rite of really a higher class than the Rājasūya.

(e) The Dikṣā.

The consecration for the Soma sacrifice, the Dīkṣā, of the sacrificer is treated briefly in the Sanhitā (i. 2. 6; vi. 1. 1), but it is quite clear in character; the man is to make himself as fit as possible for contact with the sacrifice, which is, of course, as has been seen, filled with the dread power of the god. Thus he does everything as nearly as may be topsy-turvy, exactly opposite to the usages of men.

There can be little doubt of the real analogues of this rite; they are to be found in the various devices used in other religions to acquire artificially union or likeness with the divine. The practice of severe asceticism and abstinence from food, unwashed, unshorn, produces a kind of religious exaltation, suitable for the worship of the god, just as the Bacchants in Greece produced the due state by their wild runnings and tossings of the head, and there are other traces in Greece of the prophetic ecstasy and demoniac possession."

Oldenberg³ thus finds in Dîkṣā the technical sense of the desire to serve (dāç) the god, while Weber saw in it the desiderative of daç or dakṣ, to make oneself fit for a thing.' Hillebrandt, however, has defended a theory which he started that the reference is to the preparation for a deliberate death by fire. He derives dikṣā from dah, burn', dhīkṣate being found in the Catapatha (iii. 2. 2. 30), and he refers to the cases known to us from Greek sources of deliberate suicide by fire of sages such as Kalanos of Takṣaçilā, a custom disapproved by Yājñavalkya (iii. 154). He does not suggest that the sense was more than a survival in the Vedic tradition, but he cites the Maitrāyanī Sanhitā (iii. 7. 8), the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa

(ii. 3. 11) and the Kauşītaki (x. 3) as showing that the Dîkṣā was followed by an offering to Agni and Soma which was intended to redeem the life of the sacrificer himself, and which was not as usual eaten.

The origin of Diksā as a word is not essential for the purpose of this question, nor can it be absolutely settled by any argument; the loss of the h may be paralleled in other cases of the tendency to loose it in this word (daksi and daksat are found in the Rgveda, i. 141. 8; 130. 8). But the evidence for the view of Hillebrandt is far too weak. The custom of self-immolation is not Vedic as recorded, but rather a sign of the later pessimism of the belief in the eternal misery of life, an idea quite abhorrent to the Brahmanas in their early period. The idea of redemption is more interesting, and it raises a substantial question, whether the idea of vicarious sacrifice is really old in Vedic ritual. It is clear that in the Babylonian religion 1 the idea of sacrifice as a gift led in cases of sinoffering to the view that the victim was a substitute for the sinner's own life; and in Greek religion the same idea seems attested by a large body of legend.2 In Vedic ritual, as has been mentioned above, it appears to be no more than a priestly theory, not a real living belief, and the instance cited by Hillebrandt seems to belong rather to the cases of abstaining from the use of flesh which the deity accepts and which therefore is too dangerous for ordinary or even a priest's taste, as in the case of the offering to propitiate the dread Rudra, with which Oldenberg 3 compares it. There is, however, a real difficulty in seeing precisely why this victim is so sacred : it is a taboo which all the texts concur in, including the Taittiriya, and we must probably satisfy ourselves with the view that the whole atmosphere is richly charged with godhead; the sacrificer is himself full of it, and he must not add to his overcharged condition by further participation in the divine essence. At least this is a sufficient ground, and a more real one than the theoretic suicide by fire,4 and the doctrine of redemption in the Brahmana may easily have been developed from the very fact that the victim may not be eaten, which, and not the explanation, is clearly the older part of the doctrine, the Taittiriya not actually persisting in the theory. If the victim is not to be eaten, it is because its flesh is not really animal, but human,5 and so it is a substitute for the sacrificer; this is a plausible piece of primitive religious thought.

Even less plausible is another suggestion made by Hillebrandt that the stammering speech 5 of the consecrated person is a reflex of the usage of the offering to the gods of captured foes, whose speech the stammering imitated. Apart from the doubtful sense of mrdhravāc¹ which he adduces as showing that foreign speech seemed stammering (parivālha is the Catapatha phrase), there is the far more natural explanation that the stammering speech is the sign of the new birth of the man who is consecrated and who is thus as it were born again. Oldenberg² indeed doubts whether the idea of the Brāhmaṇas which see in the Dīkṣā an embryoship and in the Avabhṛtha a birth is old, and cannot find it in the Mantras, but it is perhaps, as he admits, contained⁵ in the term jātaú in Rgveda, vii. 33. 13, and in any case it appears to be really an old idea and one consistently carried out.

!(f) The Soma Sacrifice.

The ritual text-books divide Soma sacrifices into three classes, the Ekāhas, of one day's duration, the Ahīnas, lasting from two to twelve days, and the Sattras, which last from twelve days upwards. The simplest form of the Soma sacrifice and the form normally used is the Agnistoma, so called from the fact that the last chant of the twelve which make it up is the Agnistoma Sāman; thus Sāyaṇa explains the sacrifice as the agnistomasamsthah kratuh, 'the sacrifice concluding with the praise of Agni,' and with this accords the fact that the Sāman is based normally on the first two verses of Rgveda, vi. 48, a hymn specially appropriate for celebrating the praise of Agni, though in the Vājapeya the ninth and tenth of the hymn are used. The other Stotras and their corresponding Castras are as follows:—

Morning Bahişpavamāna Stotra Pressing 4 Ājya Stotras Ājya Çastra of Hotr Praŭga Çastra of Hotr 3 Ājya Çastras of Hotrakas (viz. Maitrāvaruņa, Brāhmaņācchansin, Achāvāka)

Marutvatīya Çastra of Hotr Niskevalya Çastra of Hotr 3 Niskevalya Çastras of Hotrakas

Vaiçvadeva Çastra of Hotr Āgnimāruta Çastra of Hotr

The animal sacrifice appropriate to this rite is the offering of a he-goat to Agni. In the second form of the rite, the Ukthya, there are added three more Stotras and Çastras to the evening pressing, the so-called Uktha Stotras and Uktha Çastras. Similarly to the cups of Soma drawn at the first two pressings for the Hotrakas another is added to be drunk at the third pressing. The term Uktha is clearly a synonym of Çastra, not of Stotra or Sāman, and the reason of its special application to this form of sacrifice is obscure. Possibly it was due to this special Ukthya cup, or, as Eggeling suggests, the question of Uktha or no Uktha at the evening pressing may have been a moot one, as is indicated by a discussion in the Aitareya Brāhmana (vi. 13).

The Ukthya differs not merely by the addition of the three extra Stotras and Çastras, but also in the forms of the Stotras at the midday pressing. Thus in the Ukthya for the first Pretha Stotra the Rathantara tune is not used to the verses, Sāmaveda, ii. 30, 31, as in the Agnistoma, but the Brhat tune and the verses, ii. 159, 160. In the case of the third the Çyaita Sāman replaces the Naudhasa, while in the other two the same Sāmans, the Vāmadevya (ii. 32–34) and the Kāleya (ii. 37, 38), are used. It adds also a he-goat to Indra and Agni.

The sodaçin adds a sixteenth Stotra and Castra and another Soma cup besides a ram to Indra. The additional Stotra and Castra are also called Sodaçin, and in harmony with this the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (iv. 3 seq.) emphasizes the need of treating the Castra, which it describes, so as to bring out its fundamental character. But probably this is a later artifice: the term no doubt originally designated the sacrifice itself.4

The Sodaçin forms a part of the Atyagnistoma, which in the formal order of the ritual texts succeeds the Agnistoma and precedes the Ukthya. Its real use is as the tenth day of a Daçarātra, which consists of a period of six days, three days, and a tenth, Avivākya, 'on which there should be no dispute'. In its case the additional Stotras and Castras of the Ukthya are simply omitted, and it may be regarded as a variant form of the Sodaçin as adopted by those theologians who did not approve the Castras of the Hotrakas at the evening pressing.⁵

More important is the Atirātra form, an over-night performance of Stotras and Çastras, of three rounds of four Stotras and Çastras apiece. These twelve Stotras, each chanted to a different tune, are followed at daybreak by the Sandhi Stotra, on the Rathantara tune, of the six verses, Sāmaveda, ii. 99-104. To this corresponds the Āçvina Çastra of the Hotr, a variant of the Prātaranuvāka, which is normally used to usher in the pressing-day of a Soma sacrifice. There is also a fourth animal victim, a he-goat for Sarasvatī.

The authorities differ as to whether the preceding ritual includes or not the Sodaçin Stotra and Çastra and victim.\(^1\) It is perfectly clear that the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (iv. 6) considers that there are only fifteen Stotras and Çastras, so that it does not accept the Sodaçin as part of the Atirātra. The Pañcavinça Brāhmaṇa (xx. 1. 1)\(^2\) recognizes both forms of the rite, but Kātyāyana (ix. 8. 5) seems to assume the use of the Sodaçin, while Āçvalāyana (v. 11. 1) also inclines to that view, which is that of the Taittirīya (vi. 5. 11).

The Atiratra is essentially an ancient rite; it is referred to by name in the Rgveda (vii. 103. 7), and its character as a regular overnight carousal is perfectly clear even there as in the later texts. Eggeling spoints out that in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa the Hotr's offering formulae must contain the words andhas, 'the Soma liquor', mada, 'intoxication', and pā, 'to drink', and one of the verses used is Rgveda, ii. 19. 1, 'There has been drunk of this

The Atirātra in itself occupies thus a day and extends through the next night, whence Lāṭyāyana (ix. 5. 4) can treat the last part of it as the tail of the sacrifice which extends beyond the end of the month with which the sacrifice should end. So also in the Pañcavinça Brāhmaṇa (xx) and Lāṭyāyana (ix. 5. 6) the Atirātra and the Aptoryāma, the last of the forms are classed as Ahīnas, not as Ekāhas. These two forms thus form a transition to the Ahīnas. The Aptoryāma, which the Taittirīya Sanhitā does not recognize as a form of the Soma sacrifice, though it is found in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (iii. 41), the Pañcavinça, &c., is a further elaboration, adding four extra Stotras and Çastras to those of the Atirātra. It is dealt with in the Brāhmaṇa, ii. 7. 14.

The Ahīnas and Sattras in the main consist of aggregations of the simple elements above described. The combinations, however, of these elements lend special characteristics to the totals, and of these combinations the most normal are the Abhiplava and Pṛṣṭhya Ṣaḍahas. In the former for each of the six days the Hotr's Pṛṣṭha Stotra consists alternately of the Rathantara and Bṛhat Sāmans, while in the Pṛṣṭhya four more Sāmans are used, the Vairūpa (Sāmaveda, ii. 212, 213), Vairāja (ii. 277–279), Çākvara (apparently ⁵ always in practice chanted on the Mahānāmnī verses), and Raivata (the Vāravantīya tune adapted to the verses, Sāmaveda, ii. 434–436).

The Vajapeya is seldom used as a form of Soma sacrifice proper.

There is further a difference of hymn forms or Stomas. In the Agnistoma and Ukthya there are three common forms varying according to the use of the Stomas. The Jyotistoma form uses the Pañcadaça Stoma for the first six Stotras, the Saptadaça for the next five, and the Ekavinça for the twelfth. The Gostoma uses Pañcadaça for the first, Trivṛt for the second to fifth, Saptadaça for the sixth to tenth, Ekavinça for the last five. The Ayuṣṭoma has Trivṛt for the first, Pañcadaça for the second to the fifth, Saptadaça for the next five, and Ekavinça for the last five.

In the six days of the Abhiplava the order of the Stomas is thus: Jyotiştoma, Goştoma, Ayuştoma, Goştoma, Ayuştoma, and Jyotiştoma. In the Prşthya the order is Trivrt, Pancadaça, Saptadaça, Ekavinça, Trinava, and Trayastrinca.3

There is, however, a further refinement, the use of all the Prsthas, which is alluded to in the Taittiriya Sanhita.4 In this case all the Prstha Samans enumerated are used, and according to the texts the model for their use is provided by the Aptoryama when performed as a sarvaprstha.5 In that case the Pretha Samans are recited in the peculiar manner which gives them their names; namely having inserted within them another Saman to which they serve as sides, being chanted before it and after it. Further, the whole of the Stotras, except those of the Bahispavamana, Madhyamdinapavamāna, and Arbhavapavamāna are recited in this Prstha manner, A further peculiarity is that the Rathantara tune is used as the centre of the triplets of the Madhyamdinapavamana, the Brhat as that of the enclosed Sāman of the Agnistoma Sāman, the Vairūpa as that of the third Pṛṣṭha Stotra, Vairāja as that of the first, Cākvara as that of the second, and Raivata as that of the fourth. Apparently this is the peculiarity which gives the name sarvaprstha. The complication is increased by the fact that the Ajya Stotras are performed in the Pancadaça Stoma, but the four Prethas in the Ekavinca, Caturvinca, Catuccatvārinca. Astācatvārinca Stomas respectively. The cases where the verses are divisible by three are simple enough, as then the parts can be divided between the encircling Pretha and the centre or Garbha; in the other cases the centre is given the smaller number of verses, thus in the forty-four verse-form the central one has only fourteen to fifteen on either side.

Of the Stomas the Trivrt has nine verses to deal with ($S\bar{a}maveda$, ii. 1-9), but the Pañcadaça and the others make themselves up out of three verses by repetition. Thus the Pañcadaça is normally made up as aaa+b+c=5; a+bbb+c=5; a+b+cc=5, the Ekaviñça by aaa + bbb + c = 7; a + bbb + ccc = 7; aaa + b + ccc = 7, but the varieties are numerous.

It is unnecessary to examine in detail the question regarding the origin of the use of Soma. As Victor Henry 1 has pointed out, there can be no doubt that already in the Indo-Iranian period Soma was offered in this form to the gods by a special priest who himself consumed part of the drink. It is clear that in the earliest period the juice was pressed out by pounding in a shallow mortar, and that it was only in India that the practice of pounding the plant with stones was adopted, perhaps in order to afford a greater portion of liquor for a larger number of priests, though the use of a mortar is recognized still in the Rgveda.2 The sacrifice also already in Indo-Iranian times supposes the existence of a priest apart from the sacrificer. It is doubtful whether the rite shows traces of more than this as existing in Indo-Iranian times; the priests of the Agnistoma are sixteen or seventeen when the Sadasya is added, as he is in some authorities, especially the Cānkhāyana Crauta Sūtra, whereas those of the Avesta are only eight, and the only actual identity of function seems to be that of Zaotar and Hotr, perhaps originally not the invoking but the offering priest, when the two functions were combined in one man and the offering was the more important of the two. The Agnidhra is also comparable with the Atrevaksh, but of the others the names and functions are not really comparable.3

insoluble by Henry and cannot really be finally determined.4

More important is the question of its use as a popular drink. It must be freely admitted that in this capacity its place had been taken by Surā in Vedic times, and Surā was slowly and imperfectly invading the ritual. The parallel of Surā suggests that Soma must once have been a popular drink in the land of the Indo-Iranians, and that it ceased to be one when its character was changed for the Vedic Indians by the necessity of procuring it from a distance, thus spoiling it by keeping too long. To this theory some weight is lent by the fact that the Hūm plant of the Parsis is said to turn sour after a few days' keeping, while the appayana of the ritual suggests that the stalks used were withered and required to be refreshed with water. As an alternative Victor Henry has suggested that the plant was obtained from the ritual of the conquered peoples; thus it was a drug causing an orginatic result which was really strange to the Aryan religious temperament: this would explain among other things the contempt shown for the Soma-seller in the Vedic ritual, the dislike of Zoroaster for the Soma ritual, and the peculiar dread of the Soma shown in the necessity of a complete purification at the end of the rite, of special solemnity of character. The conjecture is interesting, but the author readily admits that it has no special cogency, and there are one or two traces in the Rgveda that Soma was not merely a hieratic drink, though its use in the ritual must have tended to make it more and more sacred and less safe for ordinary men.¹

The purport of the Agnistoma is declared by Hillebrandt 2 to be a festival at new or full moon in spring or the commencement of the year at which the nectar of the moon, King Soma, is offered to the gods, and in the ninth book of the Rgveda he sees accordingly hymns for the moon festival. He supports this view by the fact that Apastamba (x. 2. 5) and Kātyāyana (vii. 1. 4) prescribe it as a sacrifice in spring, while the Catapatha Brāhmana (x. 1. 5. 4) allows it to be performed at any period of the year. The whole rite he considers 3 to be a case of sympathetic magic: the moon's rays are full of nectar and they are represented by the shoots of the Soma-plant, and the manipulations of the priests are adequate to provide the gods with the nectar which they desire, for it is an old Indo-European idea that the moon holds the drink of the gods.4

The theory is to some extent connected with Hillebrandt's view ⁵ of the identity of Soma and the moon, which has repeatedly been discussed, but which is on the whole not really acceptable. ⁶ But it is unnecessary to do more than point out that in all probability the theory makes the error of confusing the side-issues with the original purpose of the sacrifice. Oldenberg ⁷ has seen in the rites, especially the straining of the Soma through the sieve, characteristics intended to secure the fall of rain, but he expressly recognizes that this is merely a side-issue, and not the primary purpose, and the same principle applies satisfactorily to the view of Hillebrandt. The identification of Soma and the moon was a natural enough one, and one in which the waxing and waning of the moon as the seat of the nectar of the gods, the connexion of dew with the moon, and other motives may have mingled, but that it was the primitive character of Soma is most unlikely. The essence of the Soma sacrifice is the gift to Indra 1 and the gods of the strong intoxicating liquor which impels them to be mighty and richly to reward their votaries, and this is the conclusion reached by Victor Henry 2 in his careful study.

It is, however, fair to note that there is a certain peculiarity in the Soma ritual inasmuch as the Soma which is offered is also treated as a great god and anthropomorphized, perhaps even in the Iranian period.3 This might therefore seem to suggest a totem ritual in which the god is consumed by his votaries, not as an ordinary act of eating, but as a formal sacrifice of communion, to renew the kinship of god and votaries and of the votaries among themselves. The god is killed in the pressing, but every effort is made to repair the mischief, another point consistent with totemistic ritual, but also, unfortunately for its value as evidence, with the ritual of all animal sacrifices, and not all such offerings can plausibly be made totemistic. The theory, however, is unnecessary to explain the facts; the drink in itself possesses powers of a wonderful character and thus is suitable to attract awe, and to this must be added the extra character of sanctity which accrues to it as the food of the gods and their most beloved nourishment. Again, the facts do not show any traces of that peculiar relationship of man and Soma which makes totemism appear a necessary explanation of the facts. There is no such connexion of blood kinship with the plant as is necessarily found in what is deemed a real totemistic relation.

Moreover, it must be remembered that in Vedic religion totemism has very little to adduce in its support. The use of beast or vegetable names ⁴ for people is valueless as evidence, ⁵ since the names may be in some cases mere nicknames, in some derived from the use of a symbol of a terrible or cunning or useful animal or plant as a badge, to impart the peculiar quality it possesses to the wearer, without implying any blood relationship. The late mention of the Catapatha Brāhmaṇa (vii. 5. 1. 5) in connexion with Prājapati's form as a tortoise that men say that all beings are the children of the tortoise (Kaçyapa, which is identified with Kūrma) is a mere piece of priestly speculation, and gives no trace of a real descent, even if descent alone were valid evidence of totemism. We do not hear that the Kaçyapas worshipped tortoises or ate them sacramentally or did anything special with regard to them.

(g) The Sautrāmanī.

In the Taittirīya Sanhitā the Sautrāmanī appears only as a part of the Rājasūya rite, but the Brāhmaṇa (ii. 7) contains the rite as an independent sacrifice. According to Lāṭyāyana (v. 4. 20) the latter form is the Kaukilī Sautrāmaṇī. The Kaukilī is also described in the Catapatha Brāhmaṇa (xii. 7, 8) with the Mantras in the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā (xix, xx), and the Kāṭhaka Sanhitā deals with it in xxxviii and the Maitrāyanī in iii. 11, both giving the Mantras only for the rite. The other Lāṭyāyana calls the Caraka Sautrāmaṇī, and it is dealt with in the Taittirīya (i. 8. 21), Kāṭhaka (xii. 9), Maitrāyaṇī (ii. 3. 8), and Vājasaneyi (x. 31, 32), and in the Catapatha Brāhmaṇa (v. 5. 4). The name Caraka is probably a reference, as the normal use of the term denotes, to the schools of the Black Yajurveda, and not, as suggested by Hillebrandt,¹ to the school of the medical Caraka. Hiraṇyakeçin (xiii. 23 seq.) adapts the ordinary relation of the two forms by ascribing the Caraka form to the Rājasūya as the general form, and the Kaukilī for use for one who desires heaven.

The essence of the Kaukili form is the combination of various forms of sacrifice. It is reckoned in the Sūtras as a Haviryajña, but it is marked by animal offerings, to Indra of a bull, to Sarasvatī of a sheep, and to the Açvins of a goat. These are offered on the fourth day, the central day, along with oblations of milk, and also of Surā and of animal fat. There is also a bull for Agni at the beginning of the rite, apparently in lieu of the usual goat for Agni and Soma offered on the day preceding the first Sutyā day of the Soma sacrifice, and a bull for Indra Vayodhas at the end in place of the barren cow to Mitra and Varuṇa which concludes a Soma sacrifice.

The purpose of the rite has been conjectured by Hillebrandt ² to be the taking over from an unbrahmanical and therefore, though Aryan, barbarous race of the Surā-drinking, and the modelling of it on the analogy of a four-day Soma sacrifice, and he thinks that Surā was once a drink akin to Madhu ³ and connected with the Açvins. The Açvins are deities of inferior status as Soma-drinkers, but Surā was once, as the Vendidad shows, an honoured drink, and only in the later texts such as Gautama (xxiii. 1) and Āpastamba (i. 9. 25. 1) is it regarded as sinful. Now the two drinks, Surā and Soma, are called repeatedly in the Catapatha Brāhmaṇa the andhasī, and they are mentioned in the Rgveda (vii. 96. 2) also in connexion with the Sarasvatī, on which river Aryans of brahmanical and unbrahmanical habits must have come into contact, and the Sautrāmaṇī represents the fusion of two cults. The Vasisthas again in the seventh Mandala of the Rgveda show a certain indifference to the Soma cult, and their place was the Sarasvatī; possibly the Soma cult was brought to them by tribes who followed in their tracks. The traces of this higher character of the Surā rite are to be seen in the stress laid by Caraka's school on the use of Surā in medicine.

This is ingenious, but not very probable, and the view of Blo mfield 1 is that the rite is a deliberate copy of a mystic process, the healing of Indra by the Acvins after excessive Soma-drinking. Oldenberg seemst o accept this explanation, and he considers that the Sura was never anything but a popular drink, which was turned to sacred uses as we know it by the priests. The suggestion is plausible, for the Sautramani is certainly a rite in which priestly ingenuity seems to play a dominating part, and the legend of Namuci is of a peculiar character. Hillebrandt's view of the Vasisthas is not supported by any adequate evidence. He points out that in their Mandala, which is approximately over a tenth of the Rgveda, soma occurs thirty-seven times as against thirty-five times in the fourth Mandala, which is only about an eighteenth of the text, and suta fifteen times in both cases, while to the Vasisthas is ascribed in the Catapatha Brahmana (xii. 6.1.41) the special duty of Brahman priest. He also thinks that the predominance of Varuna in the seventh Mandala shows a preference for his cult as compared with that of Indra and Soma. But all this is rather fanciful. The figures are insufficient to prove anything against the connexion of the Vasisthas with Soma, the Brahman priest was after all essentially the supervisor of the Soma ritual, and the high position of Varuna could easily become his from the foundation of a family belief in the Soma cult. The gods of the Rgveda are part of an ordered system, and there is no real possibility of assigning any god to any special family.

(h) The Pravargya.

Only in the Taittirīya Āranyaka (iv and v) do we find the Pravargya Mantras and their explanation. The Maitrāyanī Sanhitā, like the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā, gives the Mantras for it, but the Kāthaka ignores it entirely. It forms a part of the performance of the Upasad days of the Soma sacrifice, but there can be no real doubt that in origin it stood as an independent sacrifice, as is suggested by its unimportant place in the ritual. The essential portion of the rite is the heating of milk and ghee in a pot, called the Mahāvīra, from which libations are made among others to the Açvins and of which the sacrificer partakes. That this rite was of importance is shown by the stress laid on it in the Aitareya (i. 18-22) and Kauşītaki (viii. 3-7) Brāhmanas. The Aitareya (i. 22. 14) expressly explains the whole as a mystic union of the gods, which produces a new body for the sacrificer, and Geldner 1 accepts this view in so far as he regards it as an allegory of the devamithuna or mithuna generally. The Catapatha Brāhmana as explained by Eggeling 2 presents a more attractive theory: the pot is the symbol of the sun, not of the Linga as Geldner's version implies, and the milk represents the divine flood of life and light which falls to the lot of the sacrificer. The pot is to the sacrificer the head, as the sun is the head in relation to the universe, and the rite provides the sacrificer and the universe alike with a head and with the divine essence of light and life. The Brahmana works in the story 3 of the horse head of Dadhyañe Ātharvana which communicated the Madhu. This symbolism explains well the deep reverence paid to the Mahavira pot, the optional character of the rite, since the Soma sacrifice is adequate to confer all it bestows, and the rule of the Aitareya that it is a rite not to be performed until one has already offered a Soma sacrifice, and so become worthy of the honour of a new celestial head, though the Kauşitaki (viii. 3) more prosaically refers the prohibition to the fact that the body of the sacrificer is incomplete until he has performed a Soma offering and so cannot receive the head, and modifies it by allowing its use at the first Soma offering of one who is versed in the Scriptures.

This mystic explanation accords well with the view of Oldenberg 4 accepted by Hillebrandt 5 as to the nature of the rite in its original sense, viz. that it was a sun-spell in which the Mahavira represents the sun; and the heating of the milk, over which a golden plate is put, is a symbolic refreshing of the heat of the sun and consequently a refreshing of the powers of the sacrificer. This is probably the original sense of a rite whose antiquity is proved by its clear existence in the time of the Rgveda, which refers to it especially in the Frog hymn, vii. 103.

The presence of the ceremony in the Aranyaka is to be compared with its position in the Catapatha Brahmana, xiv, where it precedes the Brhadāranyaka Upanisad, and in the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā (xxxvi-xxxix), where it precedes the Içā Upanisad. It seems in the Yajurveda tradition to have been held to be of too great secrecy and importance to be included in the ordinary teaching of the school rather than to be later in time or in development, for there are no clear traces of lateness in either the Mantra or the Brāhmaṇa portions of the text. It would be dangerous to derive any conclusion of posteriority from the similarities of phrase which occur, as in the verse trastimati te sapeya found in the Aranyaka (iv. 7. 5; v. 6. 12) and the Sanhitā (i. 2. 5 h). But the speculation of the Brāhmaṇa shows a tendency to pass over into the Upaniṣad style.

The Pravargya ceremony suggests the transition to the Upanisad, and the same tendency is shown in the speculations attached to the Caturhotārah which are given in the Aranyaka (iii. 1–11),¹ and commented on in the Brāhmaṇa (ii. 2, 3). There can be no real doubt as to the meaning of these formulae in their primary aspect. The formula names various gods, who are identified with the priests to the number denoted by the names given, and their use is obviously as a substitute for the performance of the rite,² though they are also employed for various magic rites. The formulae are not by any means modern, and occur in the Kāṭhaka (ix. 8, 11, 13) and the Maitrāyaṇī (i. 9. 1), but the explanations are clearly tending to a mixture of theosophy and the application of the rite to mere magic ends.

In the Catapatha also the account of the Pitrmedha (xiii. 8) is intended to show a philosophic end, for the bones of the dead are to be arranged with bricks interspersed to form the shape of the bird fire-altar, clearly a case of the identification of the sacrificer with the fire-altar, and another sign of the mystic doctrine of the unity of the altar, the sacrificer, and Prajapati which dominates the Catapatha Brāhmaṇa. The Taittirīya Āranyaka treats of this only in Mantras; it includes the whole of the burial and the collecting of bones as well as the actual making of the formal and final burial of the calcined bones, and it gives additional matter such as a monthly offering to Yama (v. 5).

(i) The Agnicayana.

In the elaborate, and in detail tedious, rite of the piling of the firealtars lies the most philosophic content of the Sanhitā, for in it finds expression the chief doctrine of the sacrificial ritual, the sacrifice as a cosmic power of the highest potency. Eggeling, to whom we owe the clearest exposition of this doctrine, traces the first expression of it preserved in the literature to the Puruşa hymn of the Rgveda (x. 90), where the creation of the universe is figured as the sacrifice of a primeval Puruşa, who is all that is and that shall be. This creation cannot be regarded as a single definite act: it is regarded as ever proceeding, and the year, the symbol of time, takes its part in that the three seasons, spring, summer, and autumn, form the ghee, the kindling-sticks, and the oblation, undoubtedly an attempt to recognize and explain time in its relation to the universe.

In the Brāhmaṇa texts this doctrine has become stereotyped in the doctrine of the piling of the fire-altar, which is intended to be a representation of the eternal cosmic sacrifice which lies at the bottom of the representation of the world. But the Puruṣa of the Rgveda has been merged in a slightly different conception, that of Prajāpati-Agni. who now represents all that is and shall be. Moreover the element of time is not forgotten: the fire-altar is piled by Prajāpati by means of the seasons and is the year, again the symbol of time. Again the fire-altar must be built for a year, and the fire itself, which is one with the altar, must be carried by the sacrificer for a year.

The form of the altar is that of a bird, and the piler of the altar is strictly forbidden to eat of a bird, lest he should eat the fire and be ruined.2 There can be little doubt of the origin of this device of form; Prajapati, the all, is conceived as being the sacrifice, the sacrifice is essentially in one aspect the Soma, for which the altar is available for use in the ritual, though not essential, and the Soma again was brought from heaven by the bird-shaped Gayatri. The bird-shaped Gayatri is addressed in the Atharvaveda (vi. 48. 1) as the god of the morning pressing, and the formula there given is employed by the Vaitana Satra in connexion with a stanza (vi. 47. 1) which is clearly addressed to Agni, and Agni is the recognized deity of the morning pressing. It is the lightning form of Agni which, identified with his metre, opens up the clouds and fetches with it the Soma from the sky, and the identification of the bird with the Soma is perfectly natural, as the two are essentially conjunct.3 Agni too in other passages of the texts, from the Rgveda 4 onwards, is frequently called a bird. Naturally the bird form is intended to bear the sacrifice to the world of heaven,5 but that is clearly not its primitive intention.

Interest is also attached to the fact that on a gold disk, the symbol of the sun, itself deposited on a lotus leaf, the birth-place of Agni, is placed a golden figure of a man, the symbol of Prajāpati, and that above him rest in separate layers the Svayamātṛṇṇā bricks, which are naturally perforated bricks, symbols of earth, atmosphere, and heaven, the perforations permitting the golden man to breathe.

The Brahmana, however, makes a further advance beyond the mere conception of the sacrifice as a cosmic creation, exemplified in detail by the explanation of the different features of the world as emanations from the sacrificial procedure, as when the right side is said to be stronger than the left because the sacrificer in the rite turns round on it.1 It accepts the identification of the sacrificer and the deity, and thus causes the acts of the sacrificer to produce for him the same results as he produces in the sacrifice. If he piles up the altar with its atman and its body, he becomes possessed of his atman in yonder world.2 If he mentions Agni's priyam dhama, he himself goes to that abode.3 Prajapati piled the fire and lost his renown, but restored it by means of putting down the Yaçoda bricks: by putting down these bricks, the sacrificer confers renown on himself, and since there are five, and man (Purusa) is fivefold, he confers renown on the Purusa.4 In this passage the reasons for the development of the term Prajapati in place of the Purusa of the Raveda appear more or less clearly; Purusa was apparently too normal a word to express in a satisfactory way the idea of the all-embracing unity, and possibly too the point emphasized by Eggeling,5 that the sacrificer in this great rite was normally a lord of people, be it king, or prince, or great landowner, or clan chieftain, or a Brahman, may not have been without weight in this connexion. Man (Purusa) appears again in a passage where the fire stands in the same relation to the Sayuj bricks as the Purusa to the sinews.6 The identity of sacrificer and god comes out very clearly in the ceremony of the Visnu strides 7: in performing them, the sacrificer is nothing else than Visnu in very presence conquering in turn the several worlds. His movements on the occasion account for the different characteristics of the mind of men, of whom some are set on action, others on rest. So when he puts down the Vikarni brick he repeats in his proper person the vikranti of the gods.8

So far the Taittiriya, with which the Maiträyani and the Kāthaka agree in substance, shows as advanced a doctrine as the Catapatha. The Catapatha, however, goes a good deal further in the inquiry into the nature of Prajāpati, and develops the doctrines implicit in the identifications accepted even in the Taittiriya. Thus the identification of Agni with death, which is shared with the Taittiriya, leads to the suggestion that the sacrificer as Agni, as time, is death, and that as the sacrificer dies he becomes immortal, for death is his own self.1 The version of the Taittiriya as regards the fate of the sacrificer with the Agnicayana is that in the world to come he has his own atman and prana.2 The Apsarases, representing the Pañcacodā bricks he has put down, embrace him, and act as his bodyguards (tanūpānī),3 an idea which reminds us of the female guards of the later Hindu king.4 The sacrificer's breaths are supported by the Viçvajyotis bricks, which are heavenly deities, and by dependence on them he reaches the world of heaven.5 The tortoise placed on the altar leads him straight to the world of heaven.6 The conception seems rather to be that the rite will secure for the sacrificer a continuation of his self in the next world; indeed the insistence on the identity of the atman and the prana almost suggests that the ideal of the text was a repetition of the present life.

It may indeed fairly be asked whether it was not this very insistence on the identity of the future life and that on earth which ultimately resulted in the conception of transmigration. Of this there is absolutely no hint in the Taittiriya any more than there is in the Raveda. Indeed there is still less cause to see transmigration than in that case, for the prose does not present any of the manifold ambiguities of the Rgvedic verse. But though, among others, Geldner 7 sees Samsara in the Rgveda, the passages (x. 14. 2; iv. 42. 1) which he cites are not capable of proving that hypothesis. The first he translates in a forced way, following Sayana,8 and the latter is clearly too vague to render any help: Varuna says rajāmi krstér upamásya vavréh, which he renders, 'I control the future form of existence of man', but neither vavr's nor upama naturally bears the sense ascribed to it. Windischo following a hint by Boyer 10 sees transmigration in the wish in x. 14. 14 that Yama may give long life among the gods, but that view is open to serious objection, as I have pointed out elsewhere,11 and Oldenberg 12 also rejects the suggestion. Böhtlingk 13 sees the Samsāra but without Karman in i. 164. 30, 38, but this version cannot be right; the verses are riddles, but Pischel 14 sees no trace of transmigration in them.

Still less acceptable is Geldner's view 1 that there is a reference to a pre-existence of Vasistha in vii. 33. 9.

The Catapatha goes further in its description of the condition of the soul in its future life: thus in x. 1. 5, 4 the pious need then take food only in fourteen days, in four, six, or twelve months, or a hundred years, or are even able to dispense with it in toto. They live in intercourse even with the impersonal Brahman according to another text (xi. 4, 4, 2). Indeed in x. 5. 4. 15 the wise man is expressly held to be free from desire altogether, and the value of sacrifice and penance for gaining the world to come is denied. Moreover in the Catapatha 2 as in the Taittiriya Brahmana 3 itself in the latest portions (iii. 10-12) appear the germs of the later doctrine of transmigration, the fear of repeated death in the world to come; it is significant that in the Kausītaki Brāhmana 4 this view is found, but not in the parallel portion of the Aitareya. The Catapatha also contains the legend of Bhrgu, and other traces of the strict rule of retribution, which is another sign of the growth of the Samsara idea.5 Of this there is no real trace in the Taittiriya Sanhitā, another sign of the difference in time between the two texts.

Similarly the Catapatha shows a marked advance in speculative examination of the nature of Prajapati. The Taittiriya cannot be credited with any intelligible theory of the nature of the supreme deity. Indeed the Taittiriya has nothing of value regarding his relation to the universe: he created offspring indeed as his name shows,6 and in two passages the waters are declared alone to have been in existence, but in one case? Prajāpati as wind disturbed them, in the other he beheld them, showing that he existed independently of them, as indeed was inevitable. On the other hand the Catapatha shows a really developed theory of the nature of mind as the prius of all existence, and the development from it of speech, of breath, of the eye, of the ear, of work, of fire (x. 5. 3), and a further passage describes the self made up of intelligence, endowed with a body of spirit, a form of life, &c. (x. 6. 4). The self which is thus conceived is not merely the self which is the universe, but it is also the real self of the sacrificer, and on passing hence it is the self which he shall obtain, which is greater than earth or ether or all existing things, and which is the one absolute truth.

The Catapatha is too original in the doctrine to let us doubt that a single mind conceived it in this shape, however much of it was becoming part of the common fund of Brahmanical thought, and tradition ascribes the view to Çāndilya. There is no doubt that in the case of the Catapatha the Agnicayana was only later embodied in one whole, as we now have it, with the rest of the ritual, and its whole nature is that of a further development of theology, a ritual developed from simpler elements by priestly ingenuity in accord with a gradually growing theory of the nature of sacrifice. A simple fire altar must be assumed for any use of the fire in a formal ritual, but the Agnicayana has passed all ordinary limits, and has been developed into an end in itself. It does not seem that the use of such an altar was ever necessary, save when a Mahāvrata day figured as part of the sacrifice.

The Mahavrata itself carries out the idea of the Agnicayana. It is doubtful if the Mahāvrata was ever normally celebrated otherwise than as part of a Sattra; it is stated by Sayana on the Aitareya Aranyaka (v. 1. 1) that it could be performed as an Ekāha, an Ahīna, or a Sattra. As part of a Sattra it is often recognized in the account of the Sattras in the Sutras,2 but it occurs also as part of an Ahīna rite in several passages.3 The appropriate place for a Mahavrata day was before the concluding Atiratra of a Sattra, after a Daçaratra; thus the Baudhayana Crauta Sutra repeatedly adds to the Sattras an extra day, the Mahavrata, before the final Atiratra.4 That it was normally made a part of a Sattra is shown also by the prohibition, attested both by the Catapatha Brāhmana (ix. 5. 2. 12, 13) and by the Aitareya Aranyaka (v. 3. 3), of the performance of it for another, thus assuming that the performers will all be Brahmans engaged in a great sacrifice. The Catapatha insists also that the Agnicayana must not be performed for another, but that contradicts its own references to the rite as performed in different cases,6 and can at most mean that if the Agnicayana was a preliminary to a rite with a Mahavrata day, it must not be performed for another, though it recognizes that others held a different opinion.

The feature in which the Mahavrata resembled especially the Agnicayana is in the shape assigned to the Mahavrata Saman and the Mahaduktha, the Pṛṣṭha Stotra of the Hotṛ, and his own litany at the midday pressing. They are both intended to represent the fire altar in its shape, and thus the Sāman is arranged as five parts with varying Stomas: the correspondence 1 is

In the case of the Mahaduktha the details are given in the Aitareya Aranyaka for a bird form; the Çānkhāyana Āranyaka² has preferred to treat the form as that of a human being, thus bringing out more clearly the identity of Prajāpati with Agni, and with the sacrificer. So in the Catapatha the bird shape never completely excludes the human.³

It is impossible to doubt that this arrangement is not at all primitive; the Agnicayana must be deemed to have been thought out before the new idea could be applied to such intractable material as the Stomas on the one hand, or the verses on the other, and the divergence between the Aitareya and Çānkhāyana shows that there was no early and fixed tradition excluding variants. It is of interest also to note that the Āranyakas represent a definite advance of speculative ingenuity as applied to the fire cult, and pass naturally to the more theoretic results attained in the Upanisads, just as in the Catapatha the results of the Agnicayana in v-ix lead to the development of philosophic speculation in x.

The Mahāvrata day is also in another respect of singular interest, as it shows how priestly ingenuity could be applied to transmute a popular rite into a highly theological one. The basis of the day is clearly an old and popular festival, that of the winter solstice, when steps are necessary to encourage the sun to regain strength for the sake of fresh growth on the earth. The rite teems with hints of this character, the beating of the earth drum, the exchange of ritual abuse between a hetaira and a Brahmacarin, the bhūtānām maithuna which the later taste of Çānkhāyana (xvii. 6. 2) declared to be obsolete (purāṇa), and not to be done, the fight of an Aryan and a Çūdra for a white round skin, a symbol of the sun, the solemn swinging of the priest on a swing, the piercing of a skin with arrows, the dance of maidens with water-pitchers, the driving round the sacrificial ground, the girding of a warrior with arms. But this is all amalgamated with the artificial litany and Sāman engendered by the Agnicayana rite.

(i) The Acvamedha.

The horse sacrifice, as has been seen, occupies a special position in the Sanhitā, which gives little more than the Mantras for it, and gives those in such a manner as to show that this part of the ritual was slow in obtaining a full entrance into the canon of the Black Yajurveda. It is significant that the Rajasuva finds a more secure place (i. 8): that rite was one of regular occurrence, as it was the recognized part of the customary celebrations of the consecration of a new prince, while the Acvamedha was an exceptional and extraordinary rite. Its original purpose is shown clearly enough by Apastamba, who (xx. 1. 1) says: 'A king of all the land (sārvabhauma) may perform the Açvamedha'; a later hand, no doubt, has added the words any asarvabhaumah. Baudhayana simply says (xv. 1) that a king victorious and of all the land should sacrifice. In the vigorous phrase of the Taittirīya Brāhmana (iii. 8. 9. 4), 'he is poured aside who being weak offers the Acvamedha.' Or again, as the Sanhitā has it (v. 4.12.3), it is essentially like the fire-offering an utsanna-yajña, a sacrifice of great extent and elaboration.1

It is, as Eggeling suggests, probably this characteristic which has caused the Acvamedha to receive such curious treatment in the texts. The Aitareya Brāhmana ignores it; the Kausītaki Brāhmana has nothing of it, but it is dealt with in Cankhayana Crauta Sūtra, xvi, after the Rājasūya in xv, these two sections being part, according to tradition, of the Mahākausītaki Brāhmana, presumably merely the Kausītaki as enlarged by similar additions. In the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā the Mantras occur in books xxii-xxv and the Brāhmana in Catapatha Brāhmana, xiii, but though the first eighteen books of the Vajasaneyi no doubt form its core, it is of interest that the Anukramani to the Sanhitā does not apply to xxii-xxv the epithet Khila which it uses of the later books.3 In the Pañcavinça Brāhmana the rite appears at xxi. 4 in its rightful place among the Ahīna sacrifices, as it is technically a trirātra. The ritual is given in detail in the Sūtras of the Yajurvedas and also, after the Rājasūya, in the Vaitana Sutra of the Atharvaveda which Bloomfield holds to be older than the Gopatha Brahmana.

The sacrifice is in itself unquestionably recognized in the Rgveda, as i. 162 and 163 are hymns relating in clear language to it, and it is possible that the Brahmodya in i. 164 was intended to serve for the priests' colloquy at the Açvamedha. These hymns, however, belong to the latest period of the Rgveda; they are assigned by Arnold in his Vedic Metre to the popular stratum, and there is adequate linguistic evidence to confirm this view, which is shared by Oldenberg 1 and Eggeling 2 among others.

In view of the theory of the connexion of Mantra and Brahmana maintained by Bloomfield among others, it is of importance to note that in this case the Raveda shows a considerable variation from the outlines of the rite as presented in substantial accord by the other texts. There is no trace of the long lists of victims which all the Sanhitas agree in giving: there are only two, the goat and the horse. The goat is led before the horse to carry the news to the gods, and is the portion of Pusan or Indra and Pūṣan, though Çānkhāyana (xvi. 3. 27-30 converts the goat into two, both included among the paryangya victims, fastened round the horse's limbs, that to Pusan being tied at the forehead, and the other to the navel. In the Maitrayant (iii. 12) and the Vajasaneyi (xxiv. 1) there are two, one tied to the forehead for Agni, one to the navel for Pusan or Soma and Pūṣan, the two texts differing on this point. The Taittirīya Brāhmana, followed by the Sutras, recognizes (iii. 8. 23) the goat for Agni as well as those given by Çankhayana. Moreover, in the lists of victims, the Taittirīya, with which the Kāthaka literally agrees, has a different order and different victims to those of the Maitrayani and Vajasaneyi, showing that there is a considerable differentiation between the Rgvedic and the Sanhitā rituals. In minor details the same point is clearly shown; thus the goat and the horse are led round the fire, and probably the stake also, while the later ritual knows only the paryagnikarana or carrying of a firebrand round the victims. On the other hand, the reference to the gold, the two cloths, and the cakes already show that the offering had features comparable with the more elaborate detail of the later sacrifice.

As revealed in the later texts the sacrifice is essentially one of princely greatness. The steed for a year roams under guardianship of a hundred princes, a hundred nobles with swords, a hundred sons of heralds and charioteers bearing quivers and arrows, and a hundred sons of attendants and charioteers bearing staves, and the Catapatha preserves records of two cases where its progress was impeded: Çatānīka Sātrājita took away the steed of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, and Bharata that of the Satvants. If the year were successfully passed the steed was sacrificed with a ritual of extreme elaboration, though even these texts show that there was no real holocaust of victims on the scale indicated by the numbers mentioned, as the wild ones were set free.1 The features of the rite beside the actual slaying of the victim comprise the panegyric of the king by a Ksatriya and a Brahmana lute-player, and in the Catapatha a cyclic Akhyana of which we have too scanty information to understand it fully. There are also as central features the lying of the chief queen reluctantly with the horse, with which must be connected the remark of the Catapatha (xiii. 1. 9. 9) that a hero was born to him who sacrificed with the Açvamedha, the Brahmodya of the priests, and the dialogue of the queen, other wives and priests, which is of a decidedly obscene character. Other points of importance are the laying of importance on the power of the sacrifice to redeem sin, which is stated in the Taittiriya (v. 3. 12. 2) as well as in the Catapatha (xiii. 3. 1. 1), the decoration of the horse and the driving of it into water, the water being an essential part of the sacrificial ground. Moreover, at the bathing of the horse before its year of wandering, a 'four-eyed' dog is slain and allowed to float under it in the water.

To Oldenberg 2 the rite appears to be a sacrifice to obtain the desires of the king, offered after a great success, rather than a thank-offering for his success, and in this he is no doubt right. The connexion of the rite with Prajāpati he holds to be later, and argues that its original connexion was, as suggested by the verses in the Catapatha (xiii. 5. 4), rather with Indra, slayer of Vrtra, as was natural in a rite essentially connected with war. In the choice of the horse he sees the influence of magic; the slaying is to confer on the god and through him on the sacrificer the strength (vaja) of the swift and powerful steed.3 The dog was possibly once slain to drive away evil spirits from the horse, or, as the texts treat it, as a representative of the powers of evil.

To Eggeling 4 the explanation of the sacrifice seems to be in the fact that, just as man could be sacrificed as the highest offering, so the steed, next to man in the scale of the animal creation, was essentially a suitable offering on a great and solemn occasion. Prajāpati is connected with the steed because on the Brahmana theory the sacrifice is identical with Prajāpati, and so the steed can be called in the Taittirīya Brāhmaņa (iii. 9. 17. 4) the form of Prajāpati and most conformable to Prajāpati. On the other hand, he points out that Varuna is essentially connected in the earlier conception with the horse, and that the horse in one conception is the steed of the sun which traverses the heaven, which is Varuna, while the heavenly region is conceived as a sea of waters, and so the horse is sprung from the waters. Varuna therefore must have been the earlier deity of the horse sacrifice. An obscure legend in the Taittiriya Sanhitā (ii. 3. 12. 1) recognizes the connexion of Varuna and Prajāpati with the horse.

These two accounts supplement each other and represent fairly the Brāhmaṇa view of the rite. Any further speculation must be hypothetical, but it is at least reasonable to ask whether there is not some trace of an older side of the ritual. The nearest Aryan analogy is that of the October horse at Rome, where the slaying of the steed was accompanied by rites which render the theory that the horse represented the vegetation spirit at any rate plausible. The use of the blood of the horse as 'medicine', the carrying of the tail to drip blood on the focus of the Regia, the decking of the horse with cakes, and the fact that the victim was one of the winning pair of steeds in a chariot race are all signs of an elaborated version of a simple ritual of the slaying of the vegetation spirit in horse form, a fact proved to exist in other cases. At Rome the whole has been elaborated out of easy recognition by the natural tendency of a people to transform its simple agricultural rites into acts more in harmony with military developments, but the original basis is still fairly apparent.

There is a good deal in the Indian ritual which is in accord with the theory of a vegetation ritual. The strength laid on the need of a son and the action of the chief queen show that mere success is not alone what is aimed at; significant also is the rite of the Avabhrtha,2 where a man of hideous appearance is driven into the water and an offering made on his head to Jumbaka, and he is then let go, apparently being driven away, bearing with him the sins of the village. Evildoers stepping into the water are freed at once of all sin.3 The eating of the flesh of the horse is clearly referred to in the Rgveda, and of course the representative of the vegetation spirit is often eaten, the placing of a cloth for the horse is clear proof of the semi-divine character assigned to it, and the hymns emphasize this side of its nature. The obscenity of the conversation Oldenberg suggests as possibly due to vegetation magic, and this is no doubt its function, as in the dialogue of a hetaira and a Brahmacarin at the Mahavrata,4 rather than an entertainment of the gods or the remains of popular freedom of speech. There is indeed no clear trace of the horse being the victor of a race, but the solemn year of freedom takes the place of that episode, and it is possible that in the Rgveda (i. 163. 5) the term sanitúh refers to this characteristic of the steed, for we have no evidence for the Rgveda of the year-long peregrination of the horse. That the body of the horse is not preserved in part for 'medicine' is true, and significant that the rite was not in the Brāhmaṇa period consciously a vegetation ritual, but it does not disprove the possibility that this was part of its original character.

Another theory of the nature of the sacrifice has more recently been advanced. The reason for the connexion of the horse with the gods of the Açvamedha, to which reference has been made above, is a matter of some interest. It is clear that the presence of Prajāpati is a product of priestly speculation, as probably also at the Vājapeya. But it is by no means certain that Indra was the earliest god to whom the horse sacrifice was offered, as von Negelein thinks.\(^1\) Von Negelein considers that the offer was one to the sun thought of as a horse to strengthen his circuit in the heavens which gave the divisions of time. In Vedic times Indra as king of the gods with his steed in union defeats the Asuras, and so the earthly king, uniting himself mysteriously with the sacrificial horse, and its magic power, defeats his earthly foes. Thus Indra's horse is the thunderbolt, which slays Vrtra, and so the horse in the sacrifice enables the sacrificer to slay his human foes. Varuna followed in the ownership of the horse, and lastly Prajāpati.

This view of the sacrifice as an offering to the sun-god of his peculiar animal is perfectly reasonable in itself, and there is some evidence in its favour from other peoples. Thus in Greek literature we have many records of offerings of horses to the sun, at Rhodes and in Arcadia, but these may be traced to an imitation of the Persian ritual which recognizes the offering to the sun of white steeds, white being also the colour in Greece. White, of course, is the Vedic symbol of the sun, as in the round white skin which represents the sun at the Mahāvrata according to the Kāthaka and other texts. But Indra is not the sun in the Vedic religion, even if we admit that possibly in the Vṛtra legend there may be preserved a relic of the melting of the glacier by the sun's heat, as Hillebrandt supposes, and the connexion of Varuṇa with the rite is suggestive of another explanation of the facts.

There is much evidence of the connexion of the horse with water deities in Greece.⁵ Mithridates and Sextus Pompeius offered horses to the ocean, and there are other traces of the rite as well as the epithet "Innios applied regularly to Poseidon. There is evidence too from Russia and China of the primitive tendency which sees in water an identity or similarity with the horse, and there is no doubt that a god of the waters, as Varuna tends to be, can naturally receive as his offering the horse. In Eggeling's view 1 the horse of Varuna is the sun, the courser of the skies; but this is rather an artificial combination, and it is doubtful if the earliest conception took this form. Nor is it surprising that Indra should figure prominently in the rite without necessarily being the original owner of it, for he is pre-eminently the god of the warrior, and again he is often mentioned as owner of the bay steeds, and an offering of a horse to him is absolutely in place.

There is no trace in the Acvamedha of the chthonic character which Paul Stengel² sees in the horse sacrifice in Greece, though probably without justification in the case of the sacrifice as a whole. It is suggested, however, by Oldenberg 3 that one hymn of the Rgveda (x. 56) may show a practice of the offering of a horse to the dead, and this might lend support to Stengel's view that the horses offered to Heroes, as suggested by the slaying of horses in the Iliad for Patroklos and as depicted in grave reliefs, were intended to serve the spirits of the dead as steeds to bear them on nocturnal journeyings; thus Pausanias (i. 32.3) tells us that at night were heard at the grave of the Spartans who fell at Marathon the neighing of steeds and sounds of battle, and it is true that there was no cavalry charge in the actual contest. Moreover, Stengel brings the dog into the category of a companion of the spirit-rider; dogs receive offerings according to an Attic inscription of the beginning of the fourth century along with the κυνηγέται,4 and Hekate is surrounded by dogs in her nightly wanderings. With these dogs might be compared the dog slain in the Açvamedha, which von Negelein thinks to be a representative of Vrtra.5 But on the whole the evidence of any parallel is here far too slight for serious consideration. The real parallel to the dogs of the Greek ritual are rather the dogs of the Indian eschatology.

The human sacrifice as a ritual form is not alluded to in the Sanhitā, but the Brāhmaņa (iii. 4) enumerates the symbolical human victims as does the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā (xxx). Neither the Maitrāyanī nor the Kāthaka has any notice of the rite. The ritual is mentioned in the Catapatha and given in detail by Apastamba (xx), Çankhayana (xvi. 10-14),1 the Vaitana Sūtra (xxxvii, 10-xxxviii, 9), Hiranyakecin (xiv. 6), Kātyāyana (xxi. 1), but not by Baudhayana, in whose work no trace of the rite is found, a fact of some importance. The versions of Cankhayana and the Vaitana are quite distinct from those of the Brahmanas and their corresponding Sutras; they supply a ritual for the slaughter actually performed of a single man, which is based exactly on the Acvamedha, and both texts recognize the Purusamedha as depending on the Acvamedha. These texts also consider the end of the rite the healing of the sacrificer's bodily ills, and not the winning of immortal life, and the hymns used are taken from the Roveda and Atharvaveda. There can be no doubt that the ritual is a mere priestly invention to fill up the apparent gap in the sacrificial system which provided no place for man. On the other hand, the Yajurveda texts recognize only a symbolic slaying of a whole host of human victims who are set free in due course and only animal victims are offered. The ritual does not help to decide whether the form was substituted later for a real sacrifice or was a mere priestly invention, and the decision on this matter can only be given by other considerations. Eggeling,2 who inclines to the former view, quotes with approval Weber's suggestion that when the eating of the victim became part of the rite the human sacrifice would naturally become more and more impossible, but this is clearly an erroneous view of religious development: if the human sacrifice was ever usual, every probability points to the victim having first been eaten, and the very essence of the rite would lie in the tasting of the blood.3

Now that human blood was shed in the ritual is not to be denied. In building the brick-altar for the fire the pan, which the sacrificer has used for carrying about for a year the sacred fire, is built into the bottom layer, and on it are put the heads of the five victims—man, horse, ox, sheep, and goat—to impart stability, as the Catapatha Brāhmana (vii. 5. 2. 1 seq.) clearly states. In the Catapatha (vi. 2. 1. 37 seq.) the last to perform the whole rite of slaying the man is said to have been Cyāparṇa Sāyakāyana, and only one victim was normally in its time offered, either a he-goat for Prajāpati or one for Vāyu, and the use of real heads, if not actually of victims slaughtered for the purpose, or of gold or clay heads, is disapproved. But it still (vii. 5. 2. 1 seq.) gives the Mantras for the full rite, as does

Apastamba (xvi. 17. 19, 20), who, however, allows them all to be used for one victim, that for Vayu, only. In the Taittiriya tradition as preserved by Apastamba the head is to be purchased of a Ksatriya or Vaicya slain by an arrow-shot or lightning for seven or twenty-one beans,1 and apparently to be severed from the head at the time of purchase: it is then given life by being laid on an ant-hill with seven holes, and redeemed from Yama by three Mantras, while the whole sacrifice is completed by a he-goat which is offered to Prajāpati. But according to the Taittirīya Sanhitā (v. 5. 1) a goat offered to Vāyu Niyutvant is used to supply the head for the fire-pan, in place of all the other victims, including man. This passage, however, cannot be relied on as giving a general rule for the Taittirīya which normally recognizes the pacucirsani as used, though in yet another passage it suggests (v. 1. 8. 3) that the four animal victims were allowed to go free after the circumambulation with fire, the offering to Prajapati being used to complete the rite. It would seem in that case that only the human head would be placed in the pan. In the Kāthaka (xx. 8) the buying of a head of a dead man for twenty-one beans is also prescribed, but the use of all the heads is clearly contemplated, and this is no doubt the traditional Taittiriya view. The Maitrayanī (iii. 2. 9) seems to regard the actual use of the heads as normal.2

It would be impossible to deny that we have here the record of the very widespread usage of slaying a human being to act as the guardian of the foundations of a building, a custom which is world-wide and has often been exemplified in India. But that is not a human sacrifice in the ordinary sense of the word—it is significant that it is the form found in Canaan 3—and clearly affords no parallel for the rites of the Yajurveda. Nor does the Sanhitā present any other evidence of this rite. The rite indeed is poorly supported in Vedic literature. Hillebrandt 4 saw indeed in the Rgveda (x. 18. 7; 85. 21, 22) references to the rite as preserved in the Cānkhāyana Crauta Sūtra, where the chief queen lies with the dead man, but this suggestion can hardly be accepted as probable. The passages referred to yield a perfectly adequate sense without being applied to the extraordinary use postulated by Hillebrandt, and the whole of his argument belongs to the erroneous theory of an earlier ritual Rgveda.⁵

In the Kaustaki Brahmana, there is apparently an option between an offering for Prajapati and one for Vayu; the Cankhayana allows also the use of the five heads.

The other evidence of consequence is that of the legend of Cunahcepa.1 But here the whole story reveals the slaving as proposed as something utterly monstrous. The king binds himself to slay his own son, contrary to all Vedic propriety, and buys a Brahman's son, and induces by a bribe the father to undertake the slaving, from which all the priests held aloof. The son is saved by prayer to the god, and taken away from the unworthy father and adopted by Vicvamitra, one of the king's priests. Whatever the purpose of the tale, it is enough to show that human sacrifice was for the Brahmana period a horror beyond words, and the Mahabharata insists that it is unknown,2 though it contradicts itself elsewhere in this regard.3 It should be noted that the offering here contemplated is solely an offering to satisfy the wrath of the god; there is no sacramental significance, nor any possibility of the application of a totemistic or corn-spirit theory, Eggeling points out the curious and obviously unreal character of the name of Ajigarta ('having nothing to swallow') and his other sons, and lays just stress on the fact that the ascription of the father to the Angirases is in accord with the connexion of that family with sorcery and with the fire ritual, in which, as we have seen, the slaying of a man was clearly once permissible, though not usual at the time of the Brahmana texts.4

§ 9. THE LANGUAGE AND STYLE.

(a) The Mantra portions.

The grammar of the Mantra portions of the Sanhitā presents few points of importance. It essentially represents a stage intermediate between that of the Rgveda and the Brāhmaṇa texts, but approximating much more to the former than the latter. The later character of the language appears clearly in the variants of the Rgveda which occur. Thus in iv. 5. 10. 4 for vṛṇyāh as a third person singular (RV. vi. 28.7; vṛṇṇyāt, TB. ii. 8. 8. 12) is found vṛṇaktu; in iv. 1. 10 a for the yád agne kắni kāni cid of the Rgveda (viii. 102. 20) is found yád agne yắni kắni ca, as also in the Maitrā-yaṇi (ii. 7. 7), though the Rgveda clearly preserves the correct form of the Āmredita as in viii. 73. 5, kárhi kárhi cit. In iv. 1. 4 c dṛçé ca replaces abhikhyā, which the other texts also reject; dṛçá ca (Maitrāyaṇi, ii. 7. 4) is another effort at a better text. In iv. 1. 2 s the unusual járbhurāṇaḥ of RV.

ii. 10. 5 has become jārhṛṣāṇah, and the Maitrāyanī (ii. 7. 2) and the Kaṭhaka (xvi. 2) carry the process further by changing nābhimṛçe in the same Pāda to the commonplace nābhidhṛṣe. In iv. 2. 6 the óṣadhīh as nominative is changed where possible to óṣadhayaḥand pārayiṣṇvaḥ becomes pārayiṣṇavaḥ, and so also in the Kāṭhaka (xvi. 13) and the Maitrāyaṇī (ii. 7. 13). The same texts here and elsewhere banish the faulty íṣkṛṭiḥ for niṣkṛṭiḥ. In the Taittirīya (iv. 2. 6. 3) tanúvām is a variant of tanvaḥ of the Rgveda (x. 97. 10); only in one late passage (x. 85. 46) of the Rgveda is such a form as çvaçruâm found.

Similarly in i. 6. 5. 1 addityāh is a form unknown to the Rgveda from that stem. Again in no independent passage has the Taittirīya the \bar{a} of the locative from stems in i, whether masculine or feminine. So also the use of au in the dual both in a and consonant stems is on the increase in the Taittirīya, while ebhih for aih, \bar{a} for ena, $\bar{a}sah$ for $\bar{a}h$, and \bar{a} for $\bar{a}ni$ steadily diminish in independent passages, and there is no case of a genitive in $\bar{a}m$ for $\bar{a}n\bar{a}m$. So also the locative forms in ayi or avi from i and u stems are not used in independent Mantras, nor instrumentals in i from \bar{i} stems, except possibly in i. 1. 5. 2, nor forms in \bar{a} from an stems in the neuter plural. Of stems in \bar{r} the genitive plural \bar{a} has \bar{r} and in i. 3. 4. 1 is found $napt\bar{a}ram$.

Transition forms showing the merger of the declensions are not rare, such as 6şadhayah noted above, revátayah, iv. 2. 11. 1, and pátnayah, v. 2. 11. 2; gavīnyaù, iii. 2. 11. 3; hánūbhyām, iv. 1. 10. 2; vii. 3. 16. 1. Akin to these transitions is the use of yūṣéṇa, v. 7. 20, for yūṣṇā, and the influence of analogy is seen in agnavisnu, i. 8. 22. 1.

Among pronominal forms the use of kim in kimçila, v. 5.9.1, is a later form than the kad of Rgvedic compounds. atmānam appears as a reflexive, though not found in this sense in the Rgveda. For the yuvóh of the Rgveda is found in iii. 5. 4.1 the more normal form on the ordinary analogy, yuváyoh.

ékān is normally used to make up compound numbers, and the list of numbers in vii. 2. 11-20 supplements those found in the Rgveda, and shows a development of the use of numbers.

In the verb the forms in masi, in thana, and tana steadily disappear; and the number of the rarer subjunctive and optative forms from the acrists is steadily lessening, parallel with the standardizing of the language which reveals itself in full in the Brāhmaṇa texts. Thus in the case of the root acrist the participle of the active disappears, and the middle participle is very rarely found as in rūhāṇa (iv. 1. 2. 4), dhuvānā (iv. 4. 12. 5), vimāna

(iv. 6. 3. 3). On the other hand, the agrist in a appears more frequently as in ákhyah and ásicat, átrpam, áruham, asadah, ádrçan. In the s agrist the Taittirīya differs from the Rgueda in exhibiting forms like atānsīt (iv. 7. 13. 5) with an inserted i, and in the injunctive hāsīt (vii. 3. 13. 1), but the anomalous forms in se have disappeared.

The future, on the other hand, develops considerably in use, and the second future appears in its infancy as in anvägantå yajñápatir vo átra in v. 7. 7. 1, where the Atharvaveda (vi. 123. 1, 2) has anvägantå yájamänah svastí where the present sense is assigned to it in Whitney's translation.

The denominatives show the development of forms outside the present system as in papayişta and the participles kandāyişyánt-, meghāyişyánt-, çīkāyişyánt- (iii, 2. 8. 3).1

The gerundives in áyya and tva disappear almost entirely. On the other hand, the forms in tavyà and aniya, which are of the Brāhmaṇa period and which commence feebly in the Atharvaveda, are not to be found.

In the infinitive the disappearance of most of the Rgvedic dative forms is marked, especially those in ase, those from vowel roots, and the forms in dhyai. There are no locative infinitives in sani.

In the gerund tvt occurs at iv. 1. 1. 4 in khātvt, but not elsewhere independently; tvā is regular; on the other hand, tvāya is found in kṛtvāya (iv. 1. 5. 4) and vṛtvāya (iv. 1. 2. 3), yuktvāya, and tatvāya (iv. 1. 1. 1), and it is clearly 3 a late combination of tvā and ya.

Similar signs of later usage are to be seen as regards the prepositions: paráh never takes the accusative or instrumental or locative; sanitúr, sanutár, sumád, smád disappear.

The Taittirīya yields very little that is novel in grammar, for the use of jinvár, ugrár, bhīmár, tveṣár, crutár, bhūtár with āvṛt in ii. 4.7.1,2 is no more than a mere blunder. More interesting are the curious forms dhvanayit, iv. 6.9.2; ajayit, i. 7.8.1, which hardly admit of any reasonable explanation as correct. gamádhye in i. 3.6.2 is probably merely a blunder for gamádhyai. sīmáhi in iv. 3.13.2 is of doubtful form and sense, the Rgveda (x. 7.1) having sácemahi. Other forms with unusual shortening ⁷ are seen in jigivánsah, i. 7.8.4; and nīnima, iii. 2.8.3, against the metre. Of aorists the causatives ajījipata, i. 7.8.4, and ajijñipat, ii. 1.11.3, are noteworthy, and of simple verbs agrabhīm, i. 7.12.2; agasmahi, i. 2.9.1 (Rgveda, vi. 51.16, aganmahi); avrṣāt, ii. 4.7. 2 (a very strange form). The strong forms strnāhi, vi. 3. 1. 2 (a prose direction), and grṇāhi, iv. 4. 12. 5, are not very rare, and jāgriyāma occurs in i. 7. 10. 1, where the Vājasaneyi (ix. 23) has jāgryāma. On the other hand, as opposed to the shortenings noted above, the injunctive acrist has jīhvaratam in i. 2. 13. 2, where jihvaratam would have sufficed. In iv. 7. 14. 1 vaniṣanta is a strange third plural acrist subjunctive for which the Rgveda (x. 128. 3) has vanuṣanta and the Atharvaveda (v. 3. 5) saniṣan.

(b) The Brāhmana portions.

The language of the Brahmana portions differs in grammatical form very slightly from the classical language as fixed in the grammar of Panini.1 As compared with the language of the Mantras and in particular of the verses, it shows much less variety of forms and, as is natural in a formal prose, it lacks those ambiguities of form which exist in considerable number in the Mantras. Thus the free use of the injunctive forms in any time relation and in any mood has disappeared for good, the use appearing only in a few phrases with ma. The subjunctive survives, but only in reported thoughts or speeches; in any other case where the subjunctive might have appeared in the Mantra style the optative is used. The infinitive has ceased to show its manifold forms, the only uses which are normal being the form in toh after the word tovara and the new form in tum, which is formed with cak and ark. The gerundive in tavya supersedes that in tva. The tenses of the indicative develop or display a precision of use which is strange to the Mantra texts; and the use of the cases looses the vagueness which is occasionally very clear in the Rgveda, while the rules of concord are adhered to with a strictness which is not attained in the difficulties of verse composition. Similarly as regards accidence; the uses of forms like āsas in the plural, ā in the dual and the instrumental singular, ebhih in the plural, ā in the neuter plural disappear, and all that remains is a certain indefiniteness in the distinction as later drawn between the treatment of words in i and i and the use of an as the locative of nouns in an. To these points may be added the new use of (y)ai as the feminine ending in the genitive and ablative. The verb shows even less irregularity; a few cases like duke when the third singular takes the same form as the first and a few survivals of aorists later disused in the forms accepted by the Brahmanas, together with some subjunctives and infinitives, exhaust the tale. More noteworthy is the fact that the verbal prefixes are still separable and that the accent is a living reality, as it was indeed to Panini, but as it is not in the classical texts handed down to us. Add to 1 Cf. Bhandarkar, Journal Bombay Brunch Royal Asiatic Society, xvi. 264 seq.; Liebich, Panini (1891).

these points the rule of the Taittiriya that in certain cases y and v appear as iy and uv, and the differences of linguistic form are practically all included.

It is of importance further to bear in mind that these peculiarities extend throughout the whole text including book vii and that part of book v (5-7) which appears to be clearly a later addition to the Sanhitā. Thus it is fair to conclude that on the whole the Brahmana portions of the Sanhitā are approximately of the same period, though not produced by one effort, or as one work. There are, however, some traces of later usage in book vii.

In giving in detail the usages which are contrary to the ordinary rules of classical Sanskrit or are for some other reason worthy of notice, it will be of value to treat the several sections of the text separately; for this purpose books i and ii can be taken together, books iii, vi, and vii as wholes, and book v as two sections. Book iv, as all Mantra, can be omitted from consideration.

(1) Euphonic Combination.

The Taittiriya displays none of the peculiarities which mark the Maitrāyani as being the product of somewhat artificial studies (e.g. the change of unaccented as or e to ā before an initial accented vowel except a; the change t to ā before c).\(^1\) The only point of substantial deviation from the normal rules of Pāṇini is that in certain instances y and v are represented by iy and uv, the cases of which have been noted above (p. xxxviii). Though characteristic the change is not really common apart from the words gāyatrī and rātrī in their oblique cases, and tanā. There has also been noted above the treatment of triṣṭubh, anuṣṭubh, and uṣṇih.

Of some interest is the clear tendency seen in the Sanhitā to shorten the long vowels of the first parts of words in composition. In ajakṣīrá, ii. 2. 6. 4; v. 4. 3. 2, it is possible to see the epicene use of aja as does Wackernagel, but there must be remembered pundarisrajām, i. 8. 18. 1, and grīvadaghná, v. 6. 8. 3, where that explanation is not available, nor can it be applied to iṣṭakacít, i. 5. 8. 2. Similarly we have ajatvá, vi. 1. 6. 3; amāvāsyatvá, ii. 5. 3. 7; pṛṭhivitvá, vii. 1. 5. 1; vasatīvaritvá, vi. 4. 2. 1; çarkaratvá, v. 2. 10. 6; saṃyānitvá, v. 3. 10. 1, and perhaps satanutvá, vi. 6. 8. 1, in all of which cases the long syllable is clearly lightened deliberately before the long tva. Similar instances are found in Āpastamba, as strivyañjana, viii. 6. 1; nadidvīpa, xv. 16. 2, 3; raçanasaṃmita, xiv. 6. 10.3

On the other hand sūyávasa, i. 7. 5. 3, shows a lengthening of the u

which is not easy to explain. In vii. 2. 1. 3 appears cakrivatī where the t seems wholly illogical (Pāṇini, viii. 2. 12), but the Rgveda has cakri).

In grumusti, v. 4. 5. 2, 3 contraction for guru seems to be found, as in srabhistha (Catapatha Brāhmaṇa, vi. 8. 2. 3) and vyavasta (=vyavasita Āçvalāyana Crauta Sūtra, iv. 9. 4, 5).

(2) Accidence.

1. The genitive and ablative of feminines in ā end in yai, not yāh. So genitive sūnṛtāyai, i. 6. 11. 2; çvetāyai, çvetāvatsāyai, i. 8. 9. 2; ajāyai, ii. 1. 1. 6; vaçāyai, ii. 2. 9. 7; brahmahatyāyai, ii. 5. 1. 2; ablative, çāmyāyai, i. 8. 1. 6; devátāyai, ii. 2. 10. 4; 5. 4. 4; pratiṣthāyai, ii. 6. 4. 3; for cāmyāyai the Pada text reads cāmyāyāh, the form occurring in Sandhi as cāmyāyā, and it similarly restores the Visarga in every case where ambiguity is possible, contrary to the clear probabilities of the case. In iii is found svāyai devátāyai, 1. 8. 3, as ablative; in v çvetāvatsāyai and kṛṣṇāyai as genitives 4. 9. 3; in v devátāyai, 1. 1. 3; ukhāyai, 1. 9. 4, and pratiṣṭhāyai, 4. 2. 2 are ablatives; in vi. 1. 3. 6 sūtávaçāyai is genitive, and in vii. 4. 11. 4 pratiṣṭhāyāh is the Pada version of pratiṣṭhāyāi in the text in Sandhi.

2. In a great number of cases the dative of the noun in i is used in the form yai to express the purpose or result of an action; the form aye is not found in this use, and its frequency forms a distinct mark of the Brāhmana style. Thus i and ii yield dh'rtyai, i. 6. 8. 4; samtatyai, i. 7. 1. 5; ii. 5. 8. 7; prátisthityai, i. 7. 4. 2; sámrddhyai, ii. 1. 2. 2; ávaruddhyai, ii. 1. 9. 3; sámastyai, ii. 2. 5. 4; vídhrtyai, 6; bhútyai, ii. 2. 8. 6; áti práyuktyai, ii. 2. 9. 2; párigyhityai, ii. 2. 10. 2; ápahatyai, ii. 2. 11. 4; 5. 7. 2; bhútyai, ii. 3. 1. 1; aptyai, ii. 3. 2. 2; pústyai, ii. 4. 6. 2; ánukhyātyai, ii 11. 3; bhrátrvyābhibhūtyai, ii. 6. 1. 5; strtyai, ii. 6. 2. 5; abhíjityai, ii. 6. 3. 3; svagákrtyai, ii. 6. 8. 1; prásūtyai, ii. 6. 9. 3; ánārtyai, ii. 6. 9. 3; cântyai, ii. 6. 5. 2; vyávrttyai, ii. 6. 5. 3, and, without the special sense of end, bhúmyai, ii. 3. 2. 4; sinīvālyai, ii. 4. 6. 2. In iii are found vyāvrttyai, 1.5.1; prátisthityai, 1.5.1; cántyai, 1.5.2; ánārtyai, 1.7.1; abhíjityai, 1. 7. 2; ávaruddhyai, 3. 6. 1; dhítyai, 4. 3. 5; svagákrtyai, 4. 8. 7; prájātyai, 5. 1. 4; bhrátrvyāpanuttyai, 5. 9. 2. In vii are found ártyai, 1. 4. 2; ávaruddhyai, 1. 4. 2; 10. 4; prátisthityai, 1. 4. 3; 5. 1. 6; dhítyai, 1. 5. 4; ánu sámtatyai, 1. 5. 5; párigrhītyai, 1. 5.7; abhijityai, 1. 5. 7; 5. 1. 6; samrddhyai, 1. 6. 6; vijityai, 2. 1.3; sámastyai, 2.1.3; ánukhyātyai, 2.6.2; prábhūtyai, 2.10.1; vyávrttyai, 2. 10. 4; pratyávarűdhyai, 3. 5. 3; ánārtyai, 4. 2. 4; sámpattyai, 4. 2. 5; řádhyai, 4. 5. 4; sámtatyai, 4. 3. 3; áristyai, 4. 11. 3; sámsthityai, 5. 1. 4; abhívrttyai, 5. 1. 6; jítyai, 5. 1. 6; prájātyai, 5. 8. 3.

3. In the ablative and genitive of nouns in i and i the form yai always appears. Thus in i and ii, gāyatriyai, ii. 1. 7. 1; pṛthivyai, 5. 1. 3, are genitives along with pṛḍniyai, 2. 11. 4; vṛṣṭyai, 4. 9. 1; ablatives are cákvaryai, ii. 2. 8. 6, with bhūṭyai, 3. 1. 1, and ávyuṣṭyai, i. 5. 7. 5. In iii genitives are somakráyanyai, 1. 3. 1, and vṛṣṭyai, 3. 4. 4; ablatives, pṛthivyai, 1. 1. 4; paurṇamāsyai, 5. 1. 3, and nābhyai, 4. 1. 3. In v genitives are nírṛṭyai, 2. 4. 2, 3; vṛṣṭyai, 3. 10. 1, and rāṭriyai, 7. 1. 2; ablatives, ṛḍdhyai, 1. 1. 3; bhūṭyai, 3. 10. 2. In vi genitives are gāyatriyai, 4. 11. 4; somakráyanyai, 1. 8. 2; sadṛçyai, satyai, 2. 6. 4; bhūṃyai, 3. 3. 5, and rāṭriyai, 1. 3. 2; ablatives, nābhyai, 1. 3. 4; rāṭriyai, 2. 3. 3. In vii pṛṭhivyai, 1. 5. 1, is a genitive, and paurṇamāsyai, 4. 8. 2, is ablative. So in Āpastamba occur açvatthaçākhāyai, xviii. 11. 2 (abl.); rāṭriyai, xv. 12. 7,

4. In the locative of stems in i the feminine form is yām, not au. Thus púṣṭyām, v. 2, 3, 2; uttaravedyām, 2, 5, 6; crónyām, 3, 1, 5; and perhaps cityām, 3, 5, 3; 5, 4, 2; 7, 2, 1; but citīşu is found in 4, 2, 1 against citim in 4, 2, 2, and it is compounded as tricitīka, v. 6, 10, 2, and páñcacitīka, 3, 11, 3; 6, 10, 2. In vi are found vartanyām, 4, 9, 5; uttaravedyām,

5. 9. 4. yónyām appears in iii. 4. 10. 5, and yóni is also feminine in v. 2. 2. 5; vi. 6. 2. 2.

5. In the feminine dual of stems in ī the ī is sometimes retained; thus in the nominative in i and ii occur rakṣoghnt, ii. 2. 2. 3; priyavatt, 2. 11. 4; ganávatī, 3. 3. 5; budhnávatī, ágravatī, 3. 4. 4; samānt, ii. 3. 8. 2; vṛdhanvatī, vārtraghnī, 5. 2. 5; accusatives are çākvarī, 2. 8. 5; mānavt, 2. 10. 2; mārutt, 3. 3. 5; budhnávatī, ágravatī, 3. 4. 3; dyāvāpṛthivt is nominative at 5. 2. 5, and accusative at 5. 7. 5. On the other hand, panktyaù is found at 3. 2. 9. iii yields panktyaù, 5. 4. 4, and dyāvāpṛthivt as accusative. v gives audumbarī and kārṣṇī, 1. 10. 2; 4. 4. 4, as accusatives, uttarāvatī, 4. 8. 5; parigṛhyavatī, 4. 6. 3 as nominatives; at 2. 3. 3 viyatī dyāvāpṛthivt is read. In v. 5. 7 occur as nominatives vāyumátī, çvetávatī, 5. 1. 2; sámīcī, 4. 2, and as accusative kārṣṇī, 6. 6. 1. In vi appear vapāṣrāpanī, 3. 9. 4, and viṣūcī, 6, as accusatives. In vii appears anjasāyanī srutī, 2. 1. 2; 3. 5. 3, but sakthyaù in 4. 11. 3, while āçvatthī, 2. 1. 3, appears to be a neuter dual, but is not certain (p. clii).

6. In the nominative plural of stems in i, beside the later normal yah, both ih and ayah are not rarely found. Thus in i and ii are found revatih, i. 5. 8. 2; bhayasih, 5. 9. 1; púnsvatih, ii. 5. 8. 5; raksoghnih, 6. 4. 4; on the other hand osadhayah is found at ii. 1. 5. 3; 6. 4. 2 against osadhibhyah, 4. 9. 4, &c.; vyáhrtayah and vyáhrtibhih in i. 6. 10. 8; pátnayah, ii. 5. 6. 4, but pátniyam, vi. 5. 8. 6; rátrayah, ii. 5. 6. 4. In iii ósadhayah is found at 3. 6. 3, ósadhībhih, 3. 8. 3; ósadhībhyah (ablative), 1. 8. 2; ósadhīsu, 2. 4; there are also agharávatih, 1. 9. 2; ayátanavatih, 1. 9. 2; pratícih, 2, 9, 7; etávatíh, 5, 9, 2. In v. 1-4 occur ósadhayah, 1, 8, 1; 5, 10; ósadhíbhih, 3. 11. 1; pátnayah and pátnih, 1. 7. 2; cákvarayah, 4. 12. 2; and at 1. 5. 6 manavyah; 1. 8. 4 apríyah; 4. 12. 1 gayatríyah. The ordinary form is ih; thus nairrth, 2. 4. 2; murdhanvátih, 3. 1. 5; 8. 2; mukhyavatik. 3. 4. 6; ánnavatih, 3. 4. 6; pratisthávatih, 3. 4. 6; ojásvatih, 3. 4. 6; pranatih, apanatih, pacyantih, crnvantih, 3. 6. 2; bhavantih, 3. 6. 3; tanūpānīh, 3. 7. 2; samyānīh, 3. 10. 2; ádhipatnīh, 4. 2. 3; audumbarīh, 4. 6. 1. In v. 5-7 are found agneyth, 5. 1. 1; cáksumatih, 7. 10. 2; vaisnavth, vaiçvakarmanth, 6. 9. 2, 3; but it is perhaps not in this use, the section being a later one, that it has also patnayah, osadhayah, 5. 1. 1; ádhipatnayah, 5. 5. 1; rátrayah, 6. 7. 2; cítayah, 6. 10. 3 (trícitikah, páñcacitikah, 6. 10. 2). In vi occur ósadhayah, 1. 3. 7, against ósadhibhih, 6. 3. 4; ósadhibhyah, 3. 6. 4; ósadhisu, 3. 9. 5; and asthanvátih, 1. 9. 1; satih, daívih, 3. 6. 1; vasatīvárīh, 4. 2. 1; etávatīh, 4. 3. 1; párācīh, pratīcīh, 4. 10. 4; áttrih, 4. 10. 5; pátnih, 5. 8. 1; ádayadih, 5. 8. 2; hariyojanih, 5. 9. 2; bhayasih, 5. 10. 1; sadiçih, 6. 8. 2. In vii occur ósadhayah, 1. 1. 3; 4. 8. 3; bhūyasth, 4.7.7; ubháyth, 5.1.1; satth, 5.1.1; 2.1; yavatth, 5.2.1; nighnatih, 5. 10. 1. On the other hand there are in 5. 10. 1 dasyah and gayantyah, in 5. 8. 2 aindríyah, in 5. 2. 2 ubháyyah, while in vi. 5. 7. 2; 6. 5. 2 is vaiçvadevyáh. In vii. 3. 7. 2 rátrayah is found.

7. In nouns in ī may be noted the occasional occurrence of forms of the masculine, gatáçrih, v. 1. 9. 3; vii. 2. 7. 2; ágataçrih, grāmanih, ii. 5. 4. 4; gatáçriyah (nom. pl.), ii. 5. 4. 4; senānyah, grāmanyah (gen.), i. 8. 9. 1. But sinhth (fem.) in vi. 2. 7. 3 is merely repeated from the Mantra.

8. In nouns in u may be mentioned the neuter forms cátuhsraktau, i. 8. 9. 3; dárau, ii. 5. 8. 3; anagnaú, v. 1. 3. 1, 4; yajňavästaú, iii. 1. 9. 5; vástau, 4. 10. 3; mádhoh, v. 7. 1. 3; and the fem. form íşvä, 7. 3. 1.

In nouns in û are found tanû as dual, ii. 2. 7. 5; tanúvam, iv. 2. 1. 2;
 v. 6. 6. 4; tanúvau, 7. 3. 3; tanúvām, 4; varṣāhvām, ii. 4. 10. 3; devasuvām,
 v. 6. 3. 1.

10. In nouns in an the only irregularity is the locative in an. Thus are found ātmán, i. 5. 8. 2; ii. 4. 2. 4; 5. 11. 8; vártman, ii. 6. 4. 4. In iii are ātmán, 1. 1. 3, &c.; bráhman, 5. 7. 2; áhan, 5. 10. 3. In v, çīrṣán, 1. 7. 1; bráhman, 1. 9. 3; ātmán, 2. 2. 5, &c.; 5. 9. 3; 10. 2. In vi, ātmán, 1. 7. 8; akṣán, 1. 9. 1; cárman, 1. 9. 2; 10. 4; çīrṣán, 2. 1. 5; 11. 1; 5. 9. 3; in vii, áhan, 1. 4. 2; 2. 8. 1; ātmán, 1. 4. 2; cárman, 5. 9. 3. In Āpastamba are found ahan, ix. 2. 1, &c.; āsan, v. 3. 16; ātman, vi. 28. 10, &c.; vartman, ii. 3. 13; çīrṣan, i. 4. 15.

11. There are no peculiarities in the consonantal stems. But it may be noted that mádhuṣā is found at v. 4. 5. 2; pratidhúṣāh, ii. 5. 3. 3. In the r stems the genitive plural has r; so bhrātṛṇām, ii. 6. 6. 2; udgātṛṇām, iii. 2, 9, 5.

12. In the pronouns there is little unusual. The nominative āvām occurs at ii. 5. 2. 3; 6. 5; 6. 7. 1; āvāt at ii. 5. 6. 6. The enclitic forms of the stem a are, as always in old texts, placed second word in the sentence, as in the case of asya, i. 5. 1. 2; iii. 2, 9. 5; v. 1. 1. 1; asmin, ii. 1. 6. 3; 2. 7. 1; 10. 5; asmai, v. 4. 1. 3; enam, 4. 2. 4; 10. 1, and often. The feminine ending in place of yāḥ is yai, as in asyai, iii. 4. 8. 5; vi. 1. 8. 2; tásyai, iii. 5. 7. 1.

13. The numerals show no special peculiarities; ekasmān-na-pañcāçām, vii. 4. 7. 1, 3 may be compared with ékasyai ná pañcāçāt, 4. 7. 3. The use of ca—ca is frequent in forming numbers, e.g. vii. 1. 6. 3, 4; v. 5. 2. 6, 7.

14. In the verb the most significant use is that of a few third singular persons of the same form as the first. Thus are found in i and ii, duhé, 6. 11. 3; 7. 1. 2, &c., but dugdhé, i. 8. 4. 1; 5. 1; 9. 2; īçe, ii. 4. 9. 1; in iii, duhe, 2. 9. 6; in v, īçe, 2. 1. 7; duhe, 4. 7. 4; 6. 8. 6; 9. 2; 7. 3. 4; in vi, īçe, 2. 1. 1; 5. 7. 2; çaye, 2. 5. 5; 3. 7. 5; 5. 6. 5; duhe, 2. 11. 4; in vii, ¹ See Garbe, Apastamba Grauta Sūtra, III. vi.

duke, 2. 2. 3. Here also may be mentioned dukre, ii. 5. 7. 5; cere, v. 3. 7. 2; vi. 4. 2. 6; 9. 5; and the imperfects, adulran, i. 7. 1. 1, ajahttām, ii. 5. 2. 4.

Speijer (Sanskrit Syntax, § 331) incorrectly treats fee as a perfect.

15. There remain a few relics of older sorist forms, viz. akran, ii. 5. 8. 4; aksan, i. 5. 2. 1; ii. 2. 5. 5; upāvāsrāk, i. 6. 11. 3; akar, i. 5. 2. 3, &c.; abhāk, iii. 1. 9. 4; hār, ii. 4. 12. 3; 5. 2. 3; vi. 5. 1. 1. The compound form vidâm akran is found at iii. 5. 10. 2; and vidam cakara at v. 3. 8. 1. Optatives of interest are indhistya, i. 5. 8. 5; 7. 5. 5; vadhyāsuh, ii. 6. 6. 1. Perfects with a strengthened reduplication are mentioned below (p. cliii), as are also the subjunctives (p. clv). In vii. 5. 3. 1 dhoksyate is a passive.

16. In the case of the participles may be noted bhunjati, ii. 1. 4. 8, and in the Atmanepada, anīçānāh, vi. 2. 5. 1; yunjānesu, i. 6. 8. 4; v. 5. 3. 1; vidvisānáyoh, ii. 2. 4. 2; amānáyoh, ii. 2. 4. 2; vitrhhānáh, ii. 2. 11. 2; cinvandh, v. 2. 3. 6; 6. 8. 2, 3. The perfect active participle is occasionally found, and more often the Atmanepada; thus in i and ii are found ajághnivānsam, ii. 1. 10. 2; jaghnivānsam, ii. 5. 3. 1; jaghnúṣah, 3. 2; cucruván, ii. 5. 4. 4; cucruvánsah, 9. 2; vividánáh, i. 5. 2. 3; ījānáh, i. 7. 6; ii. 4. 11. 3; 5. 14. 1; riricānáh, i. 7. 3. 2; ácraddadhānah, ii. 6. 10. 1; and the agrist form jusanéna which, however, is found even in the classical language. In iii is ijānáh, 4.9.4; in v are cucruvánsah, 3.5.1; riricānáh, 8. 3, and cikyānáh, 2. 3. 6; 6. 9. 2; ijānásya, 6. 2. 1; 3. 4; ijānám, 7. 4; cikyānám, 6. 10. 2; 7. 4. 1; cikyānásya, 7. 6. 4. In vi, susupúsah (abl.), 1. 4. 7; cakrúsah (abl.), 4. 8. 2; jaghnúsah (gen.), 5. 5. 1; riricanúh, 6. 5. 1; 11. 1; ijānāt, ánījānam, 6. 7. 3; cucruván, 6. 1. 4, approaches an adjectival sense like the common vidvan. vii shows riricanah, 1.8.1, in a common formula, sușuvānėna, 5. 15. 2, and jaghnúsām, 5. 8. 1.

 Of other verbal forms partva, if it is to be read in vii. 5. 1. 2, is of interest as representing alone in literature the root pard, pedere. grahitavyd is found at vi. 6. 8. 2; sunniyam at vi. 2. 4. 1; avaniyah, 5. 2. 3; anapajayyám at v. 2. 1. 1; hutvá in v. 5. 6. 1 is apparently from hve,

18. Of causative forms may be noted with a, yavayati, ii. 2. 3. 2; pavayati, ii. 5. 8. 6; vi. 1. 1. 7; 4. 5. 3; kramayati, v. 1. 2. 6; 3. 1.

19. In a certain number of cases the accent of the verb is remarkable: thus are found avaciyante, i. 8. 1. 1; ricyamānām, 7. 5. 1; in ii, múcyeta, 4.6; pramtyeran, 2.2.4; in iii, lúpyeta, 2.9.5; vichídyamānam, 2.1.3; htyate, 1.9.6; apakstyamānam, 5.1.3; in v. bhídyeta, 1.9.2; ucchisyeta, 7. 3. 4; avapádyate, 5. 1. 6; in vi, praviyante, 1. 7. 1; in vii, jiyeran, 2. 1. 4; diryeta, 5. 5. 2. In all these cases the analogy of class 4 verbs is obvious. idate in vi. 1. 4.7 is found in the Rgveda and elsewhere; úksati in v. 4. 5. 2 is anomalous in the extreme as the accent ukṣáti is found at v. 4. 2. 3; 5. 9. 5, but it is given in the Dhātupāṭha (xvii. 5) as a verb of the first class.

20. The use of indeclinable forms with verbs is very limited; svagā is found with karoti, ii. 6. 10. 2; kuru, 1, and in svagākṛtyai, iii. 4. 1. 3, and vaṣaṭ kṛ is found. The suffix trā is seen in the phrases devatrā gam, iii. 4. 3. 5, akar, v. 1. 7. 4, and devatrā dattām, i. 7. 1. 6. The curious use of forms in ī appears in mithunt abhavan, v. 3. 6. 2; mithunt bhavatah, vi. 5. 8. 6, and cyett akuruta, v. 5. 8. 1. muṣṭt karoti in v. 2. 1. 7 shows the probable origin of the phrase in a stereotyped case usage. Probably here must be reckoned āsandt sādayati in v. 6. 9. 1 which otherwise is either a misreading or an irregularity unparalleled in the Sanhitā.

21. Among adverbial forms may be noted the use of vasántā, ii, 1.2.5; 4.1, and of dakṣiṇā, v. 2.10.5; vi. 1.1.1; 5.2. kāmam appears in ii. 5.4.5, and āçrutataram in ii. 5.11.1. tājāk is common, ii. 1.5.7; iii. 2.3.4; v. 4.5.5; vi. 4.6.4, &c., as in the Kāṭhaka Saṅhitā (Weber, Indische Studien, iii. 462).

22. In the use of the accent with prefixes there is, as Weber (Indische Studien, xiii. 62-67) has shown, great regularity. If the second of two prefixes is ava or ā the verb is compounded with the two; so adhyávasyati, v. 2. 1. 7; anvávaiti, vi. 6. 3. 1; anvákramata, vi. 5. 6. 3; anvárohati, v. 4. 10. 2. Exceptions such as anvaváyan, vi. 3. 1. 2; abhyaváyan, ii. 6. 3. 2, are mere blunders. The same principle is seen in abhivyáharati, vi. 4. 3. 2, but in other cases the first prefix is separately accented, as in ánu paryávartate, 1. 7. 3. 3. In a few cases where the second prefix is ā the rule is not observed, as in amāvāsyàm práty ágachat, ii. 5. 3. 6; āgrayanám práty ágachat, vi. 4. 11. 2, but in these cases as in others (i. 7. 5. 1; ii. 3. 5. 3; iii. 5. 1. 4; v. 1. 5. 9; vi. 1. 11. 5; 3. 3. 2; 6. 1. 1, 2) the prefix is no doubt felt specially as a preposition, though no doubt it is not easy to say why the feeling was stronger in these cases than in others, when the ordinary rule has been applied.

In other cases of double prefixes the accentuation of the second is only sporadic; abhyátiricyate, vii. 1. 5. 6; vyátisajet, vi. 6. 4. 2, 3; 5. 4; vii. 4. 3. 6; abhyánűväca, v. 6. 6. 3; abhyánűcyate, vii. 1. 5. 5; abhyútsarjet, vi. 2. 9. 1.

Where the verb is accented, the rule with two prefixes, of which the latter is ava or \bar{a} , is that neither is accented; so adhyavasāyāyati, v. 2. 3. 1; anvārābheta, iii. 1. 5. 1; but exceptionally in i. 7. 2. 3, prāty ābhāvati. In other cases the first is accented, as in abhí prayunkté, vi. 1. 2. 2; ánu prayánti, ii. 6. 10. 4; but there are cases where both are unaccented, abhipratigṛṇīyāt, iii. 2. 9. 5.

With participles and gerunds the two prefixes are regularly without accent; apparent exceptions are all clearly cases where the prepositional sense is strong, as vacam... anu parabhavitoh, i. 5. 2. 2. With the past participle passive the accent is on the second prefix, as abhyarūdha, ii. 5. 5. 6.

In one case a prefix has become practically amalgamated with the verb, viz. n'llāyata, v. 1. 1. 4; 2. 2; 4. 3; 9. 5; 4. 7. 6; vi. 2. 4. 2; 8. 4.

(3) Compounds.

There is comparatively little new in the use of compounds in the Taittirīya. The old dual Dvandvas of the form agnīṣōmau naturally persist; āngāpārūnṣi occurs in ii. 5. 6. 1. In ii. 6. 5. 1 is found idhmābarhīh with the dual form, but not the dual ending; in vi. 1. 1. 2 dīkṣātapāsī is found; in ii. 4. 11. 1 uṣṇihakakūbhau, which is probably not so much due, as Wackernagel suggests, to false analogy with forms like Bambaviçvavayasau as to the not rare shortening of vowels in the Taittirīya in composition. In vi. 6. 8. 4 Bambāviçvāvayasau is built on the old models, the Maitrāyaṇī having Bamba°. adyāçvāt in iii. 1. 7. 2 is an interesting case of the development of a noun form from a combination of two adverbs, while yathāyatanām and yathāyatanāt in vii. 5. 6. 4 show the way to the use of such compounds as yathāsthāna in classical Sanskrit. iṣṭāpūrtīt, i. 7. 3. 3, shows iṣṭāpūrtē made into an adjective.

A curious group of forms is afforded by tisyāpūrnamāsá, ii. 2. 10. 1; phalgunīpūrnamāsá, vii. 4. 8. 1; citrāpūrnamāsá, 2. Wackernagel 2 sees in them relies of the Dvandva form, being a singular form of tisyāpūrnamāsau to denote the day of the union. It is possible, but not certain, that ukṣavaçáh ii. 1. 7. 2, 6 may be a Dvandva. In i. 8. 18 prastotrpratiharti-bhyām occurs beside neṣṭāpotfbhyām.

Of other compounds the most interesting are the class represented by crtamkitya, iii. 3. 8. 1; áçithilambhavāya, vii. 2. 4. 2; ákrūramkārāya, v. 1. 7. 1, and kikkitākārēna, iii. 4. 3. 5, following kikkitākāram.

uccāvacān is found in vii. 4. 3. 6, and idámmadhum in vii. 5. 10. 1. The use of ékaikam and ékaikayā, of dvanda, and of anyo'nya has been noted above (p. xevi). In the compounds with ajā, such as ajakṣīrá, v. 1. 7. 4; 4. 3. 2, ajalomā, v. 1. 6. 2, the short a is probably not so much the tendency to accept an epicene form as the frequent shortening of vowels in composition noted above.

tisrdhanvám occurs in v. 5. 7. 2; i. 8. 19. 1; in ii. 3. 1. 5 madhyamesáyām denotes 'in the middle of the pole', as in madhyamdina.

In the formation of compound adjectives from Dvandvas there is some uncertainty; thus we find somendrá, ii. 3. 2. 6; in the quasi-Mantra,

v. 6. 15. 1, somaindrá; somāraudrá, ii. 2. 10. 1; somāpauṣṇá, i. 8. 8. 1; ii. 4. 4. 3, and in quasi-Mantra, v. 6. 13. 1; compare with these āgnendrá in v. 6. 17. 1; vāyosāvitrá, vii. 5. 22. 1, in quasi-Mantra passages.

(4) Syntax.

The Taittiriya has been so fully used by Delbrück in his Altindische Syntax that little need be said regarding the general syntax of the text. But there are a few points on which his account may conveniently be supplemented.

- 1. In three places in v the plural is used from the standpoint of what is done by the contemporaries of the framer of the text, thus vadāmah, 1.3.5; upāsmahe (bis), 3.2.3, and jīvāmah, 4.7.3. There is no example in the other parts of the text. More often the third person plural denotes action of men generally, a use to be distinguished from the frequent use of the plural with no specified subject to denote the priests and the sacrificers or some of them. Probable cases are caranti, v. 4. 4.5; tṛndanti, 6. 4.4; pācyanti, 6. 8.5; cṛṇvanti, 4. 10.2; juhvāti, 7. 4.2; ii. 5.11.5; niṛṇénijati, vii. 2. 10.2; bibhrati, vii. 2. 10.2; prabhindānti, vii. 6. 7. 4.
- 2. The rules of concord are carefully observed; tâm īçvarâm râkṣānsi hântoh in iii. 1. 1. 3 is, however, rare, though it has somewhat parallel forms in the use of īçvarâh unchanged for other than masculine singular forms. In v. 2. 5. 1 vyāmamātraú pakṣaú ca púcham ca bhavati the double attraction is unusual. ékavinçatir(pred.) bhavanti is found in v. 1. 8. 1. The use of the dual with one nominative with ca, the other being understood, is found at ii. 4. 4. 1, 2; v. 2. 8. 2. In mithunaú sám bhavatah, vii. 5. 9. 4, the sense is not certain; it may mean 'there are pairings', as the parallel of the Kāthaka, xxxiv. 5, suggests, or merely 'there is a pairing'. In vii. 2. 1. 3 is read âçvatthī havirdhānam cāgnīdhram ca bhavatah, and in Āpastamba, xxiii. 12. 14, is āçvatthi (v. 1. D. E. °thī) havirdhānam āgnīdhram ca. The dual is no doubt correct, but it is a rare form, and hardly to be found elsewhere in prose. Āpastamba evidently was not clear as to it.
- 3. There is little to note in the use of the cases; the nominative appears with rūpám kṛ in v. 2. 6. 5; vi. 1. 3. 1; 6. 5; 2. 4. 1, 4; 7. 1; vii. 1. 6. 2-4. The accusative is found with rdh in i. 7. 3. 2; v. 4. 12. 2; 7. 1. 7, as in Jaiminīya Upaniṣad Brūhmaṇa, i. 37. 3 seq. The ablative of time is seen in a special sense in arvācīnam ékahāyanāt, vi. 6. 3. 1, while the instrumental occurs in divā as opposed to nāktam in ii. 4. 10. 1; vi. 4. 8. 3. ahorātrābhyām is found with varsati in ii. 1, 7. 3; 4. 10. 1.

possessed being expressed, especially with the root gṛh, 'cups' being understood; analogous seems to be the use with āmayati, ii. 1. 1. 3; 2. 10. 4; 3. 11. 1; iii. 4. 9. 3; vii. 2. 4. 3; 7. 1; 'ánājñātam iva is used in ii. 1. 6. 5. The same explanation serves with bhrātṛvasya ruktvā in vi. 4. 11. 1 where 'cups' is rather to be understood than ruj to be taken as governing a genitive with the scholiast.¹

The locative occurs with kr in a few cases, as vaçé, vi. 3. 7. 5; 5. 8. 3; nirbādhé, v. 1. 10. 4; aratnaú, ii. 5. 7. 5. The use of musti kr has been noted above. váre-vrtam is found at ii. 5. 1. 4, 5 as one word.

The dative, rather than the ablative, is to be seen in the frequent use with a-vryc, ii. 1. 5. 7; 7. 7; 4. 11. 4; iii. 1. 6. 1; 2. 8. 4; 3. 3. 1; 5. 9. 2; v. 1. 7. 1; 3. 7. 2; 5. 7. 2; 7. 1. 1; vi. 1. 4. 8, as tásmai in a few places shows.

Space is denoted by the nominative in vi. 2. 4. 5, as often in the epic.

4. In the use of the pronouns the chief point of interest is the frequency of the sequences $y\bar{a}v\bar{a}n$ — $t\bar{a}m$, or similar cases, and not $t\bar{a}v\bar{a}n$. In v alone the use is seen in 1.3. 4; 4.5; 6.1; 2.2.5; 3.5; 4.3; 7.5; 4.4.2; 6.1; 7.2.3; 10.2; 11.3; see also iii. 4.1.4; vi. 3.7.5; 4.3.2; 6.2.1.

Frequent also in the indefinite ná kám caná and similar forms, as in v. 5. 4. 2, 3; 6. 8. 4; vii. 4. 8. 2; ná kútaç caná, vii. 2. 5. 3, and altered as natkarātrac caná, vii. 2. 2. 3.

The indefinite tva is not common, it is found at iii. 3. 9. 2. It is very doubtful if it should be inserted as it is by Weber (Indische Studien, xiii. 97) in vii. 5. 2. 1. The parallel passages of the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, iv. 17, and the Paūcavinça, iv. 1, lend no support to the idea; the latter has tv eva, and as it probably followed the Taittirīya the corruption of tvā(ħ) into tvā(ī) must be very old. But the partitive genitive is quite possible. In i. 6. 11. 4 the Pada treats tvam and tvo as parts of the following word. syá of the first person in thoughts is found in ii. 6. 6. 1; 8. 5; vi. 2. 8. 4.

5. In the use of the verb the Taittiriya shows the usual careful discrimination of tenses of the Brāhmaṇa style. The sense of habitual past action is given by ha sma vaí. prá harati, ha sma vaí trìhanti, i. 5. 7. 6 = v. 4. 7. 3, 4; ha sma duhe, v. 4. 7. 5; ha sma vaí purå. . úpa yanti, iii. 3. 8. 5; ha sma vaí purå. . dahati, v. 1. 10. 1.

6. On the other hand the perfect normally a denotes a present condition; the reduplicated syllable in this sense is frequently strengthened. In i and ii occur dodrāva, i. 5. 1. 4; dādhāra, i. 7. 2. 1, &c.; bibhāya, ii. 3. 3. 4; ānaçē, 5. 4. 3; in v, dādhāra, 1. 10, 5; 2. 7. 3; 10. 4; pārīyāya, 1. 8. 2; 2. 3. 1; 3. 2. 4, with dādhāra again in 6. 5. 1; 7. 8. 2. In vi there are pārīyāya, 1. 6. 4; tatāna (repeated from a Mantra), 1. 11. 3; dadrçe, 1. 11. 4; dādhāra, 6. 7. 2. In vii occur dādhāra, 2. 4. 3; ānrouh, 3. 1, 3; bhejáte, 5. 7. 1.

- 7. The narrative perfects are few in number, and uvaca forms the staple, as it probably was the source of the use. Thus it occurs eleven times in i. 7. 2 in a conversation between two sages, the imperfect avadatām being used to describe their subject of conversation. At vi. 6. 2 occur papracha and uvāca (bis), and in the speech of one of the conversers a perfect pará babhūvuh, which is obviously intended as a pluperfect in contrast to pratisthapya asit which follows. uvaca appears alone as a dictum of a sage in v. 4. 2. 2; 6. 6. 3; vi. 4. 5. 2, and in narrative in ii. 6. 2. 3; v. 2. 10. 3 (of earth, a passage not noticed by Whitney 2). In vii. 4. 5. 4; 5. 4. 2, uvāca follows an imperfect of narration to give a statement regarding it. In v. 3. 8. 1 vidam cakara is found instead of uvaca in the same sense of a teaching of a sage. Thus there are in all twenty-three narrative perfects to 1900 imperfects, and the cases are all significant. The only periphrastic form is vidam cakara, which may be compared with vidam akran found twice elsewhere. anreah, vii. 3. 1. 3, seems, however, clearly to be little more than an imperfect, and it is probably a sign of a development of the use in a book which has other signs of lateness.
- 8. The use of the acrist is normally the sense in which it corresponds to the present perfect of English, as in ii. 2. 1. 1; 3. 5. 2; 5. 3. 2; 6. 5, and often throughout. But it frequently, though not so often as in the Maitrāyaṇi, has the sense of a present. Clear cases are akar, i. 5. 2. 3; ii. 4. 9. 2; 5. 9. 1; 6. 1. 6; 4. 3; iii. 1. 10. 3; 4. 10. 4; v. 1. 7. 4; 2. 1. 5; 8. 7; vi. 1. 7. 6; ahvat, i. 6. 11. 2; ahvata, v. 5. 6. 1; ádrçan, vii. 2. 8. 2; āpat, vii. 2. 8. 2; and a series with ahvat, upāvāsrāk, anaiṣīt, asadat, i. 6. 11. 3, and akrta in vi. 4. 5. 4. The other noteworthy usage is with purā in akṣan, i. 5. 2. 1; ii. 2. 5. 5; abhāiṣuḥ, i. 5. 7. 5; abhāvan, arukṣan, ii. 5. 11. 2; vidām akran and abhāvan, iii. 5. 10. 2. It is this special usage which is seen in Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (ii. 23. 3), not as suggested by Speijer 3 a present.
- 9. The future shows no usages of note, but the periphrastic future is well exemplified in vii. 3. 1. 3 where arcitárah is contrasted with árcanti and ānrcúh. In ii. 6. 2. 3 occurs the strange prayoktáse which puzzled the Pada maker, and which Whitney (Sanskrit Grammar, § 947) explains as a first person parallel to prayoktásmi, as e. g. çāse to çāsmi.

sents, and tatina, which is also a present, and mereover a mere quotation. He omits surelly.

Sandrit Syntax, p. 253, n. 2.

10. The use of the subjunctive, though not rare, is of very restricted character. It has quite a definite and specific sense; a sage or other authority or a god declares what shall happen if something else shall take place, and the subjunctive is used in both clauses. Thus adat . . yasya . . apadhīyāntai . . védat, v. 2. 10. 3; 4. 2. 2; yád . . yájātai . . asat, ii. 6. 10. 1; yð' pagurátai . . yātayāt, yó nihánat . . yātayāt, yó . . karávad, yāvatah . . samgrhnat . . ná prá janat, 2 where directions follow in the usual optatives ; yát . . atirícyātai . . asat, ii. 3. 6. 1; yát . . jáyāma . . asat, 4. 1. 1; rdhnávat . . yó . . ādádhātai, i. 5, 1. 2; yát . . skándāt . . asat, ii. 6. 6. 2; vi. 2. 8. 5; rdhnávat . . yó . . samcinávat, v. 5. 2. 1; nír rchād yáh . . drúhyát, vi. 2. 2. 1; yó . . jáyatai . . asat, yó . . ýdhyatai . . bhavat, 5. 6. 2. In other cases it stands in simple sentences expressing various shades of meaning; direction, desire, can equally be intended, the root-meaning in each case being clearly an expression of will on the part of the speaker, the will being directed towards action by others; so in vi. 4. 7. 1, 2 the gods say hanāma, Vāyu replies váram vrnai mádagrā evá vo gráhā grhyāntai, and later when Aditi addresses the gods she uses vi grhnidhvam, the polite optative. The forms found in this usage are út tisthan, ii. 5. 1. 6; bhunajādhvai, 2. 7; ijyāntai, 6. 6; rokāt, 5. 1. 2; yájān, strņān, ghārayān, 6. 3. 1; juhavan, 5. 11. 5; v. 4. 9. 1; asat, v. 4. 8. 1; vii. 1. 3. 1; asan, vi. 1. 5. 1; jīvān, v. 5. 2. 3; açnavatha, açnavata, vi. 2.7. 1; çātayāh, 2. 8. 5; gṛhyāntai, ucyāntai, 4. 7. 1; grhyātai; 3. 8. 3; jāyāntai (text jāyantai), vii. 5. 1. 1; crīnān (text crinan), vi. 4. 8. 1.

11. The optative, beside its normal use in wishes and directions in simple sentences, is freely used in relative sentences indicating condition, or merely generality, with the optative in the main sentence whether conditional or imperative. The rule of conditional sequence is absolute as in all old texts; apparent exceptions are cases of the generic use. Thus in iii. 4. 10.4 yád. prayāyát is followed by tādig evá tát. So in v. 6. 6. 2 yáthā brāyát. tādig evá tát; similarly iii. 2. 9. 5, and in ii. 4. 9. 4 the optative has for apodosis the simple átho, and so it is as if. In iii. 4. 8. 2 yó. syát tásmai hotavyáh the gerundive serves in place of an optative of direction; so yádi. vindéyuh. vyűcyam, vii. 3. 1. 1. In other cases there is no copula expressed; yát. yoyupyéta stítir evásya sá, ii. 6. 5. 5; aprajasyám tád yán nópeyát, v. 6. 8. 4; yadaísám pramíyeta yadá vá jíyerann áthaíkam uthánam.

Another use worth note is that by which true skill in sacrifice is asserted if so and so is done, the sentence beginning så tvai, or in similar form, i. 7. 6. 2; ii. 5. 4. 1; iii. 2. 9. 2; 5. 1. 3; vii. 1. 3. 1.

In v. 5. 1. 6 yó . . cinuté yáthā sāmí gárbho 'vapádyate tādíg evá tát is followed by ártim árched, which is slightly irregular.

12. The injunctive is very much restricted in its use, being confined to the use with $m\dot{a}$, which is not rare, and with which one or two old forms of the agrist appear as in $h\bar{a}r$. In vi. 5. 9. 1 it is used in a question juhávāni3 $m\dot{a}$ hausā3m.

13. The use of the infinitive is of special interest as it displays the transition to the later classical use. Forms in tum are not indeed common, but they occur; hótum eti is at vi. 3. 1. 6; arhati governs práptum, ii. 1. 5. 2; áptum, 2. 9.7; v. 1. 3. 4; páryāptum, 2. 7. 4. çak governs aítum, ii. 5. 2. 3; jétum, vi. 2. 3. 1; abhíbhavitum, 4. 10. 1; adhriyata hótum occurs in vi. 5. 9. 1. On the other hand, the older form in um occurs after çak with a negative in avarúdham, ii. 3. 7. 1; v. 4. 1. 2. In v there occur also pátitum, 2. 5. 1, and udyántum with arhati, and in v. 5. 7 sámbhavitum, 5. 5. 1; pátitum, 3. 2; 5. 4, with the same verb.

Of dative forms dṛcé, v. 6. 4. 4, and pratidhṛṣe, ii. 2. 4. 6, are clearly infinitives. The long list of dative forms given above serve much the same purpose, and some forms like sámiddhyai approximate to an infinitive use. In vi. 2. 6. 1 yấvan nắnase yắtavaí is without precise parallel, but v. 6. 3. 1 nắbhícaritavaí has many parallels. But the form is not elsewhere used, nor is the use with āha, uvāca, or brūyāt of other texts met with.

Of the genitive form toh with içvará there are various examples; årtoh, ii. 2. 10. 5; iii. 7. 6. 4; v. 2. 8. 2; kártoh, ii. 6. 7. 1; hántoh, vi. 2. 5. 5; iii. 1. 1. 3; nírhantoh, i. 8. 3; çámayitoh, i. 3. 2; váditoh, ii. 1. 2. 6; iii. 4. 3. 4; právaditoh, vi. 4. 3. 2; gántoh, v. 4. 12. 3; sámmarditoh, vi. 6. 4. 6.

In the ablative use toh is found in å támitoh, vi. 4. 5. 6; å samsthåtoh, iii. 3. 7. 3; å víjanitoh, ii. 5. 1. 5.

The form in ah appears with içvará in pradáhah, i. 7. 6. 6; ii. 1. 1. 1; iii. 4. 9. 7; v. 1. 5. 6; 4. 4. 3; pradághah, v. 2. 1. 2.

14. The particles are used in the ordinary way. Especially accurate is the rule of the repetition of ca; áva ca hánti dṛṣádau ca samāhanti, i. 6. 9. 3, is noteworthy.

More unusual is the regular use of tvai, i.e. ti vai, found throughout, i. 7. 1. 4; 6. 2; ii. 2. 4. 8; 5. 4. 1; 6. 6. 3; iii. 2. 9. 2; 3. 9. 2; 5. 1. 3; v. 1. 3. 4; 2. 5. 3; 5. 9. 4; vi. 2. 4. 5; 4. 3. 1; vii. 1. 3. 1; 2. 10. 3. nvai occurs only at i. 5. 9. 6 (bis); 6. 7. 3; and tvava at ii. 1. 5. 4; vii. 5. 6. 5. The usage is recognized in the Prātiçākhya (v. 13), which absurdly considers the v of vai as elided.

In reporting opinions with āhuh, iti often comes twice, the sentence being broken by the introduction of āhuh.

15. The accent of the verb has been exhaustively examined by Weber (Indische Studien, xiii. 70-92). The verb is irregularly accented in atho punaty vaínam, i. 5.7.3; átho tarpáyaty evá, v. 4.4.1; abhyaváyan, ii. 6.3.2; anvavāyan, vi. 3. 1. 2; but is not accented in crapayanti, vii. 4. 9. 1. The last three cases are probably mere blunders.1 In a large number of instances, despite antithesis of construction, there is no accent. In such cases, when ca, &c., are omitted, according to Panini (viii. 1.63) the accent is optional; according to the Bhāṣikasūtra (ii. 27) Bhāradvāja allowed the omission of the accent in certain cases, while others desired the accent in all cases. As a matter of fact examples of accent and lack of accent appear with ca-ca, na-na, vā; aha has the accent only; where there are no particles the like freedom prevails, e.g. with eka-eka, anya-anya, this and yonder world, gods and men, differences of place, of time, of quality, of material, of agency, and other contrasts. hi in causal sentences has always an accent on the verb, and even if it stands in the relative clause the principal clause to which it logically belongs shows the accent; as in ii. 5. 11. 5; 6. 9. 6; v. 1. 5. 4; vi. 1. 7. 2, 4. The Pada indeed in vi. 6. 1. 2, 3 treats aiti after hí as a-cti, but that is no doubt a mere blunder. In some cases the fourth class accent is seen on what seem to be passive verbs: the instances have been cited above (p. exlix).

16. The accent of the noun shows but few peculiarities of note: the accent of vadavá in ii. 1. 8. 2, as compared with vádavā, vii. 1. 1. 2, is strange. In the prose viṣṭi is always paroxytone, and so sometimes in prose Mantras (ii. 4. 8. 1; 7. 4); in the verse it is always vṛṣṭi and so also at times in prose Mantras. In Pluti the accentuation of the Pluti syllable is always carried out, as vi. 5. 9. 1, juhávānt3 mā hauṣā3m. In vi. 3. 4. 2 pitrdevatyā3m is not a case of Pluti, but of the Kampa mark, which is accompanied by the lengthening of the syllable, but this only sporadically appears in the editions, which, like the MSS, seem inconsistent as regards it.

(5) Style.

It is impossible to place the Taittiriya on any high level as regards its style. The prose is indeed simple and in the main fairly clear, and the frequent use of oratio recta in quotations lends a certain air of life and vividness. Moreover, it is entirely free from the use of long compounds which in later Sanskrit prose deprives the language of most of its natural advantages and removes all possibility of clearness and precision. The natural use of the verbal prefixes shows the living character of the language, and the precise employment of the cases and the careful differentiation of the tenses of the indicative are points in its favour. The distinctions of mood are sharply

drawn in striking contrast to their steady fusion in the later language, and the use of the subjunctive lends variety and a certain dignity, derived from the solemnity of the heavy forms, such as apagurātai, ucyāntai, or vṛṇāmahai. The prominence of the infinitive in toh is a distinct characteristic, and like the use of the subjunctive it imparts a flavour of hieratic weight.

The structure of sentences is decidedly lacking in variety. The normal form adopted is a long series of short clauses, each with its finite verb, and a favourite conclusion to the series is a single word or phrase, like mithunatváya, or yajňásya dhítyai, in the dative, expressing the purpose of the action. Of complex sentences the most common is the relative or conditional; for reported thought or speech or purpose recourse is had to the direct speech with iti, a device which makes period building in effect impossible.

The relative sentences are fairly well constructed, but there is much clumsiness in the device which turns the subject into a relative clause and places the predicate before it, as in bráhmaņa etád rūpám yát kṛṣṇājinám (v. 4. 4. 4). There is no doubt also that the changes of subject are often harsh and awkward: in yó vå agním citám prathamáh paçúr adhikrāmatīçvaró vaí tám çucă pradáhah (v. 4. 4. 3) the change from paçú to agní is most unexpected, and the same difficulty often presents itself in the rapid changes of subject in subsequent sentences. The occasional obscurity must be attributed to the difficulty of the subject and the constant effort to explain the Mantras without regard to their original force.

It is not, therefore, surprising that in all the higher qualities of style the Brāhmaṇa is totally deficient. There is none of the quasi-profundity which is found in the Upaniṣads and in a smaller degree in the Āraṇyakas. There is no trace of humour or pathos, and even irony and sareasm are practically unknown. The aridity of constant quibbles and meaningless explanations is relieved only by occasional, and always very brief, references to real life; the angry tiger's mien affords a parallel in v. 5. 7. 4, and the danger of awaking a sleeping tiger is referred to in v. 4. 10. 5. The motion of a ship in the waters is used as a simile in v. 3. 10. 1, the yoking of a cart in v. 4. 10. 2, and in v. 2. 8. 5 the knowledge of a guide. Respect to a superior is alluded to in v. 4. 10. 5 and vi. 1. 3. 3. Most vivid is the comparison with a hunter who measures his shot before he lets go in vi. 4. 11. 3, which in its use of iyati—iyati shows the use of gesture in the teaching of the text, a fact proved beyond doubt by such passages as v. 4. 3. 3, 4, where the different postures are indicated by iyati. In vii. 5. 9. 2 the cry of joy uttered on the loosening of bonds affords a simile, and in vii. 5. 8. 5 the flight of a bird, while in 5. 6. 2 a bag, in 2. 2. 3 the milking of a cow, and in 5. 3. 2 a boat afford objects of comparison.

§ 10. THE DATE OF THE SANHITA.

(a) The Mantra Portions.

(1) The Mantra and the Brahmana.

The question of the dating of the Sanhitā will probably always remain a matter of speculation. The salient facts can be briefly summarized as follows. The Mantra portion is probably earlier than the Brahmana. This may, of course, be doubted, and Bloomfield in particular has repeatedly questioned the view that the Mantra can be regarded as preceding in time the Brahmana portion of the texts, even as regards the Rgveda itself. The two are, he considers, closely interlaced, and separation is dangerous to our understanding of the problems of interpretation presented in the hymns. Moreover, he has illustrated his theme by various examples, in his interpretation of the myth of the Gayatri as the eagle and as the bearer of Soma, or the legend of Trita as the scapegoat of the gods and so forth. On the other hand, as regards the Raveda proper, Hopkins 2 has justly insisted upon the historical distinction between the Brahmanic age and belief as these are known in extant literature, and the age and belief of the Rgveda. The extant Brahmanas and even the Atharvaveda represent a period so removed from that of the Raveda that the god who in the Raveda is not yet developed as chief god is in the Brahmanas and Atharvan already an antiquated figurehead with whom other newer ritualistic gods are identified to ensure their respectability.

But, apart from the Rgveda, it is possible that Bloomfield's theory may have a better chance of interpreting the facts. Nor can it be doubted that the Yajus Mantras and the Brāhmaṇa texts appear to reflect a very similar religious and cult outlook. The differences between the two are not the differences between the Rgveda and the Brāhmaṇas, but of a minor and less important order. The distinction in the use of grammatical forms and language is obvious and undeniable. Thus in a late Mantra passage which is found embedded in the Brāhmaṇa itself (v. 7. 2) in a supplement to the work, the Agnyupānuvākya, there are eight verses, and we find in them such expressions, foreign to the Brāhmaṇa style, as asthūri no gārhapatyāni, sām cicādhi, áti duritāni vicvā, patháyaḥ, suvitám no astu, ábhaye syāma, çám tokáya tanúve syonáh, with the past udáyan the perfect änaçúh is joined, svastí is used adverbially, and beside ájītān, ájītāh occur subjunctives in upásate, vy áçnavat, nesat, āváhāt, and the aorist optative sám açīmahi; kṛṇutā bṛhán námah is also noteworthy.

The same phenomenon is seen in other texts: thus in the Aitareya Brāhmana (vii. 12-18) we find forms like smasi, vadmasi, kurmahe, akurta, grnotana, sthana, mingled with more modern phrases. It is, of course, possible to contend that in all these cases we have to deal merely with artificial work, the creation of Vedic hymns and Mantras on an older basis, and that the varieties of diction are poetic, archaic, and stylistic, and not a sign of difference of time. The contention is a perfectly possible one, but there is really nothing cogent in its favour. It seems to be most natural to hold that the text is what it professes to be, a commentary on a text which is already existing and not a deliberate composition in the form of a text and explanation. Against this view nothing can be urged that has any weight. It is confirmed by the fact that in many cases the verses are by no means specially suited to the ritual acts they describe, and that the details of the ritual are varied in the Crauta Sutras in a way that is most improbable had the Mantras been composed and commented on at one time. Of course in many cases the result is the same as if this had been the process; the ritual application of the text is now and then very clear, and so the Brahmana and the text form a satisfactory whole, but that is inevitable on the theory which sees the origin of the Brahmana in verses handed down with practical directions as to the rite. In some cases the Mantras were completely in harmony with the ritual for which they were used and for which they were devised; in other cases the ritual had chosen verses from the Rgveda and reproduced them on the ground of some fancied or real appropriateness to the matter in hand.1

In one set of cases the appropriation of the Mantras is obvious: the Puronuvākyās and Yājyās for the Kāmyeṣṭis were early formed into sections and attached to the Sanhitā, while those for the optional animal sacrifices were collected, though not very completely, in the Taittirīyā Brāhmaṇā (ii. 8).² Here the theory of contemporaneous production is not plausible; it is impossible seriously to contend that these sets of verses, chosen from the Rgveda, really represent a more primitive condition than the Rgvedic text as now preserved. The most that can be claimed is that the verses were chosen out by the framer of the Brāhmaṇa text, and that is extremely unlikely. The Brāhmaṇa in fact seems to have been first framed on the understanding that the verses existed and were in use, and then the verses were put together later for convenience; this is indicated by the presence of several verses described by the commentator as alternatives, which can hardly have been included in the text had it been settled before the Brāhmaṇa, as, though in several cases that text alludes clearly to the verses employed by use of words indicating the peculiarity of the verse, it never alludes either to a variation of verses or to both of the verses given as variants. We have here in fact a clear case of a Brāhmaṇa text based on pre-existing Rgvedic verses, and in the rest of the Yajurveda the relation seems analogous, the difference being that the verses being those of the Adhvaryu are handed down not in a separate text, but in the Mantra portions of the Sanhitā.

This view may be illustrated by the case of the Pravargya rite. The ceremony is clearly an old one, being known in the Rgveda, and it has been most plausibly interpreted by Oldenberg 1 as a sun-spell. But in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (i. 22. 14) it appears as a representation of a devamithuna or mithuna generally. It is out of the question to suggest that the latter interpretation can be primitive; the sense of the rite is far better appreciated by the Catapatha Brāhmaṇa (xiv. 1-3) and worked into the texture of its general mystic theory. Oldenberg therefore sees in it only one of the innumerable absurdities of the theological interpretation of the Vedic texts.

(2) Relation to the Atharvaveda.

The relation of the text of the Atharvaveda to that of the Taittiriya is also of importance in the question of chronology. Bloomfield * has subjected the texts to a close examination, and has pronounced definitively for the priority of the Yajurveda. Thus the Apri hymn in the Atharvaveda (v. 27) is miserably corrupted both verbally and metrically as compared with the versions of the Taittirīya (iv. 1. 8), Kāthaka (xviii. 17), Kapisthala (xxix. 5), Maitrāyanī (ii. 12. 6), and Vājasaneyi (xxvii. 11-22). More important than any mere detailed comparisons of verses is the regular working over of Yajus material for magical purposes: the Yajus used sorcery in connexion with its great rites, but the Atharvaveda converts these incidents into substantial and independent objects. The best example of this is that of the Atharvan treatment of the mrgarasaktani (iv. 23-29). This heptad of hymns, each with seven verses, is found (save iv. 28) in the Yajurveda in part; the first and last stanza of each hymn occurs in the Yājyā and Puronuvākyā section, Taittirīya, iv. 7. 15; Kāthaka, xxii. 15; Maitrāyanī, iii. 16. 5. The intervening verses are clearly secondary padding, and the addition of iv. 28 is motived by the necessity of including the deities of whom it treats, Bhava and Carva, in any elaborate treatment of the gods, while its character is shown by the Atharvanic words mulaket, ketyaket, and kimidin. In v. 24 the phrase asmín bráhman, &c., is clearly later than the asmin brahman, &c., of the Yajus (Taittiriya, iii. 4.5; Maitrayani, ii. 6. 6). In other cases the Atharva builds on Yajurveda material, as in vii. 20 as compared with Taittiriya, iii. 3, 11, and its parallels.

That there are a few cases where the Atharvaveda has better readings is by no means surprising. The Mantras were handed down clearly in the main by oral tradition, and the chances of alteration were always great, so that we must expect to find cases where a version usually secondary is able to show a superior reading. Thus it is quite clear that in Atharvaveda, iii. 10. 1, the reading duhām in the third Pāda is more primitive than the dhuksva which the Taittiriya (iv. 3. 11. 5) presents.

The exact value of this evidence, however, must be restricted to due dimensions. The objects of comparison are the Mantras of the Atharvaveda and of the Yajus tradition, and the various Sanhitas of the Yajus cannot necessarily be dated before the Atharvan on the strength of the Mantra evidence. There is no cogent means of showing that the Atharvan as a whole is necessarily later than the redaction of the Sanhitā. But there is nothing at all improbable in the view that it is: the Atharvaveda as a whole belongs as Bloomfield 1 has shown to the period of the Brahmanas; the development of the Prayaccitta literature² is paralleled only in such cases as the Samavidhana Brahmana (i. 5 seq.), and in the Kusmanda hymns of the Taittiriya Aranyaka (ii. 3-6). The closeness of the connexion with the Dharma literature in such cases is certainly a good argument for the later relative date of the Atharvan, and it is not without significance that the geographical horizon of that text includes Varanavati, very possibly the first appearance of the source whence Benares is derived, the Yamuna, the Angas, and the Magadhas. The mention of the tiger is consistent with this view, as the animal is doubtless most prominent in the swampy forests of Bengal.2 The knowledge of anatomy is comparable, as Hoernle 4 has shown in detail with that of the Brahmana texts, and in xi. 7 the Crauta sacrifices and the Stomas are clearly familiar. The theosophy is on a par with the elevation of Prajapati to the position of chief god and creator, nor is it reasonable to consider that there is any real difference of date between the Brahmana texts and this Sanhita. Bloomfield himself recognizes that the Aitareya and the Catapatha may have preceded the redaction of the Atharvan; of course books xix and xx of the Atharvan are admittedly later than i-xviii, and the fact that the account of the Nakṣatras given in xix. 7 is much less primitive than that in the Taittirīya Sanhitā (iv. 4. 10) and Brāhmaṇa (i. 5. 2; iii. 1. 1, 2) is therefore of little consequence.

(3) Relation to the Rgveda.

On the other hand it is quite impossible to believe that the Yajus Mantras are other than later than those of the Rgveda. This question has been carefully considered by Oldenberg,2 and his conclusions do not admit of serious doubt. Thus in x, 45 the variants of the Taittiriya (iv. 2, 2) gave the inferior vásoh sūnúh and pratarám for pratarám, the older form. The other Sanhitas yield for martesu in v. 7 the disyllabic martyesu which is contrary to the usage of the Raveda; the Taittirina agrees with the Maitrāyanī (ii. 7. 9) in leaving out the antique dhāma vibhrtā in v. 2, and in v. 11 it changes víçvű vásu into vásūni. Again in x. 140. 2 the variants to prnáksi ródasi ubhé are in the Maitrayani, obhé prnási ródasi, and in the Taittirīya, ubhé prnakşi ródasī. Now the Rgveda is supported by the Sāmaveda (ii. 1167), the Kāthaka (xvi. 14), and the Vājasaneņi (xii. 107), and it is clear that the Taittiriya represents the same reading as the Maitrayanī altered under the influence of the Rgveda, while the Maitrayant can be readily explained as the outcome of a desire to insert the common prnāsi with its invariable prefix ā, which is very common in the Raveda (i. 73. 8; ii. 15. 2; 22. 2, &c.), and the knowledge of the form obhé prnāsi ródasī as found in the Raveda itself (viii. 64, 4). The two Sanhitas present for this hymn the bad variant of bhrajunti in the Parasmaipada, and the Taittiriya has niskartaram for iskartaram, the commonplace rayim for krátum, and the dative rådhase mahé for the genitive. while the Maitrayani reveals the un-Rgvedic and unmetrical dairam, and for mánuşā yugá the strange mánuşā yujá. These are only specimens of a constant process of change which removes old words like amémyane (i. 96. 5) and frequently distorts the metre, while they regularly use the more modern forms like osadhayah for osadhih. That in some odd cases better readings may survive, as perhaps in the case of x. 82. 4 c, where the Maitrāyanī (ii. 10. 3) has a more plausible text, asurtā surte rajusi nisattah for the asarte-nisatté of the Raveda, is of course of no weight in comparison with the bulk of evidence on the other side.

Prolegomena, pp. 296 seq.

³ The Tuittiriya (iv. 6, 2 d) has súrtá, which is Oldenberg has strengthened the case for the later character of the Sanhitās by an interesting observation. He shows that in the other main portion of the ritual outside the Agnicayana the Vājasaneyi shows less complete agreement with the Rgveda than in the Agnicayana, and he ascribes this to the fact that that portion contains only scattered Rgvedic verses, and not whole hymns as in the Agnicayana; the redactors found it therefore less easy to replace the Rgvedic readings in scattered verses whose provenance could not easily be found.

Oldenberg also points out the fact that the Yajya sections follow much more closely the Rgveda, and compares this with the similar contrast between the earlier and later books of the Samaveda. Thus exceptions to the rule of correspondence occur as a rule only when the verse is already found in an independent part of the Yajurveda, and is naturally repeated elsewhere in its Yajus form, or where a ritual purpose is clear, as in the case of the alteration of Raveda, ii. 15. 3 and 8, in Taittiriya, ii. 3. 14 v and w; the explanation (ii, 3, 4, 2) shows that the purpose is to use verses indicating the advance from the foot to the top, and so either verse of the Rgveda has its first two words changed to budhnad agram and budhnad agrena respectively. So in iii. 4. 11 p and q the Rgvedic (iii. 59. 6 and 1) references to Mitra disappear in favour of satyam and satyaya, because the verses are needed (i. 8, 10, 2) for an offering to Mitra as satya: here in iv. 1, 6 h the Rgvedic reading occurs in a Yajus passage, confirming beyond all doubt the sporadic character of the variation. In iii. 1. 11 t sádanāni krtvā replaces i. 164. 47 sádanād rtásya, and krtvā is not a Revedic form.

Similarly in the Acvamedha the Rgveda is copied with a faithfulness quite different from that of the Yajus text in other portions; i. 162, 163; vi. 75, and x. 169 are repeated with scarcely any variants of importance, and i. 163, 1 is found in iv. 6. 7 a without change, but in the fire ritual, iv. 2. 8 b, with considerable alteration.

In a small but significant point the priority of the Rgveda is very clearly seen. In the Sanhitā, iv. 1. 2. 4, ákaḥ sá lokam, for which the Vājasaneyi (xi. 22) and Maitrāyaṇī (ii. 7. 2) has ákaḥ sú, is clearly a case of the avoidance of the difficult u lokám which the texts did not understand. So ulokakṛt is never found in the Taittirīya, which thus stands in this regard much on a par with the Atharvaveda.

(4) Relation to the Samaveda.

The relation of the Yajurveda, and in particular of the Taittirīya, to the Sāmaveda seems also clearly one of posteriority. Thus in the treatment of the Chandas bricks the Taittiriya (iv. 4. 4) arranges the verses in groups of three, taking Rgveda, v. 6. 4, 5, 9 and v. 21. 1, 2, 4 together, following thus the Sāmaveda, ii. 372-374 and 457-459, verses in the second part of the Sāmaveda, which Oldenberg shows to be the later. Similarly in v. 4. 12, which deals with a Stotra for the Açvamedha as the parallel Paācaviāça Brāhmana (xxi. 4. 5) shows, and the Pratīka there cited pāvasva vājasātaye is beyond doubt to be seen in Sāmaveda, ii. 366-368, while the Rgveda in the original passage (ix. 100. 6, 7, 9) has vājasātamah. The same relationship is seen also in the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā, xxxviii. 22 as compared with Sāmaveda, i. 497, and Rgveda, ix. 2. 6, and in xxvii. 35-44. which follows closely the Sāmaveda as compared with the Rgveda.

The chronological place of the Sanhita Mantras appears thus to be after the Rgveda and the Sāmaveda, before the Atharvaveda, and on a similar plane to the other Sanhitas of the Black Yajurveda, but before the Vajasaneyi, which again is probably older than the Atharvaveda. It is apparently impossible to assign it to a later date than any Brahmana text preserved, and it is probably older than the Brahmana parts of the Sanhitā by as considerable a period as the Vājasaneyi in its main content is older than the Catapatha Brāhmana.2 The lower date thus depends on the date of the Brahmana portions which will be next considered, and the upper on the date of the Rgveda, since the Sāmaveda gives practically nothing that it does not derive from the Rgveda, and the date of the Rgveda remains indeterminate. The only new light thrown on it of recent years is that arising from the discussion of the presence of the gods, Mitra, Indra, Varuna or Aruna, and the Nāsatyas in the inscriptions of Boghaz Kioi of about 1400 B.C. Jacobi a has argued that these gods are Vedic gods, not Iranian or Indo-Iranian, and that we are entitled to reckon this fact as a strong support for an early dating of the Vedic life and religion as presented in the Rgveda, and he thence strengthens his chronological arguments from astronomical data in that and later texts. On the other hand Oldenberg 4 maintains that the deities are Iranian. He points out that Ahura in Zoroastrianism is clearly a derivation from Varuna, that Indra occurs in the Avesta, that the name Verethrajan proves that there was a slayer of Vrtra there, and that the evil spirit Nāonhaithya is the parallel of the Nasatyas, who also are proved ancient by the parallelism of the Dioskuroi and the two Lettic god's sons.5 Agni is absent, and Agni is specifically Indian, while the objection that Na-ša-at-ti-ia cannot represent Nāhatia, the Iranian form of Nāsatya, he answers by pointing out that it may well represent a proto-Iranian Nāsatia, or possibly another dialect allied to but not identical with Iranian as Bloomfield suggests in view of the Iranoid names on the Tell-el-Amarna letters. Jacobi has replied to this argument, but the weight of it remains not seriously affected. It is still possible that the names belong to the Indo-Iranian period, though that is not Meyer's view, and in any case they give no cogent ground for fixing any date for the Rgveda older than 1200 B.c., which is a reasonable period to assume, having regard to the extraordinary similarities of Avestan and Vedic, and the probability that Avestan is not very ancient.

The arguments of Jacobi, derived from astronomical data, may also be laid aside, because they are not only in themselves of doubtful force, but also they do not directly give any dating for the redaction of the Rgveda, which is the point prior to the Taittirīya redaction.

(b) The Brähmana portions.

As we have seen above (§ 7), comparison with the other texts shows that the Brāhmaṇa portions of the Taittirīya Sanhitā must thus be reckoned among the older Brāhmaṇa texts, earlier than the Catapatha or Jaiminīya or the Kauṣītaki, not to mention the later texts, parallel probably with the Maitrāyaṇī and the Kāṭhaka (with the Kapiṣṭhala), and perhaps also with the Paūcavinça, but probably later than the Aitareya. It remains to consider whether these facts can be supplemented by any positive dating.

(1) Relation to Pānini.

In the first place there can be no doubt that the Sanhitā in its totality is older than Pāṇini. Pāṇini in iv. 3. 102 prescribes the form Taittirīyāḥ for the followers of the utterances of Tittiri, and the Mahābhāṣya * several times (on i. 1. 21; vi. 1. 158; vii. 1. 2) uses the name Taittirīya, while it cites textually several passages of the text, including the Brāhmaṇa passage ii. 5. 1. 6, 7. It also points out in iv. 3. 104 that the rule about the formation of the word Taittirīya does not apply to the Çlokas Tittiriṇā proktāḥ as they are not Chandas proper. Weber * suggests that a part of the Āraṇyaka may be so designated, and possibly some of the Çlokas in ii may be really meant, or more likely some verses of floating tradition ascribed to Tittiri. Goldstücker's view that Pāṇini knew only the Sanhitā portions is totally illegitimate, and we are entitled with Weber to believe that he was aware of the Sanhitā as a definite whole. Probably this is why in vii. 4. 38 Pāṇini uses the phrase yajuşi Kāṭhake to show that he means a Mantra, and the view of Goldstücker is the more absurd when such a rule as ii. 3. 60 dvitīyā brāhmaņe occurs.

Moreover, there is some other evidence which can be derived from Pânini. In vi. 1, 157 he recognizes the name Pâraskara, and the Pāraskara Grlega Sūtra may possibly be intended; he knows the name Kātyāyana (iv. 1. 18), and Weber, in view of the mention of aryakrti, camila, and nispattra, and the similarity of certain rules (Pāṇini, i. 2.23,24 = Kātyāyana, i. 8. 19, 20), suggested that he knew the Crauta Sutra of that author. But the argument from argaketi was clearly bad, as chandasi is given in Pānini (iv. 1. 30), and the word actually appears in Maitrāyanī Sanhitā (i. 8, 3) as well as thrice in the Manava Crauta Satra (i. 6, 1). But cāmīla very probably comes from Kātyāyana, as it is a rare word and appears elsewhere in other forms (çāmūla, çāmulya). Kauçika occurs in iv. 3. 103, and there is no need to doubt that the Sutra may be referred to, as it is a work of real antiquity. But what is very clear is that hrdya as a name for the literature denoted later as vaçikaranamantrāh in iv. 4.96 is borrowed from the Rgvidhana (iii. 15.3), and thus we have as older than Pāṇini a text which is unquestionably on a par at best with the Brhaddevatā's and such texts as the Samavidhana Brahmana, i. e. texts of the latest fringe of the Brahmana period. Moreover, the text refers to Brahmanas of thirty and forty Adhyayas, which Weber of correctly identified with the Kauşītaki and Aitareya texts now extant. In iv. 1. 124 the name Kausītakeya is provided for. Moreover, Panini knows of Upanisads (i. 4. 79) and of Brāhmanas and Kalpas purānaprokta, which implies (iv. 3, 105) the existence of such texts not puranaprokta. The passage is of special interest because of a dispute which has been raised regarding the meaning. Kātyāyana corrected Pāṇini by alleging that the rule which requires the use of forms like Aitareyin or Tandin or Vajasaneyin or Kauşītakin should have been qualified by an exception in the case of Yājāavalkya and others. Goldstücker 10 insisted that this proved that there was so great a space of time between Pāṇini and Kātyāyana that the latter thought that works really older and younger were really of one age. Weber, who corrected him, insisted on finding in the Mahābhāsya the singular doctrine that the works were attributed to old sages, but were really contemporaneous with Pāṇini, a view rejected by Bühler and Eggeling alike. The Yājāavalkāni Brāhmaṇāni of the Mahābhāsya and Kātyāyana were perhaps part of the last Kāṇḍa of the Catapatha, perhaps an independent work, but the value of the passage lies mainly in that it is clear that these Brāhmaṇas and Kalpas also were old works in Pāṇini's days, though, for what reason is unknown (probably enough geographic), he omitted to notice them.

The date of Pānini remains undetermined. It depends essentially on the date to be assigned to the Mahābhāsya, and that again cannot be determined with absolute certainty. The references to the sacrifices for Pusyamitra (iii. 2. 123) and to the attack on Sāketa by a Yavana, i.e. probably a Greek prince, the famous Menander (iii. 2. 111), yield a plausible date of about 155-153 or 144-142 B.C. Pusyamitra's appearance is very noteworthy; his court is referred to with that of Candragupta in the commentary on i. 1. 68 and his sacrifice, famous as an Acvamedha in Kālidāsa's time, again at iii, 1. 26, and as this king would else be hardly mentioned we must admit that the examples were composed during his lifetime. Weber,5 who first recognized the reference to Pusyamitra, was unable to accept the proofs adduced as absolutely convincing, though his first difficulties,6 arising from the reference to an attack of the Yavana on the Madhyamikas, which he thought a reference to an oppression of the school of Buddhists of that name by Kaniska, were removed by finding that the Madhyamikas were perhaps a people of the middle country mentioned in the Brhatsanhitā (xiv. 2) of Varāhamihira, as Kern 7 showed. But what is sufficiently important is that examples for the illustrations of Panini date from the period about 140 B. C., and that his work was then in a commanding position as is evidenced by the clear proof of the elaborate way in which it was commented on in Dākṣāyaṇa's Samgraha, by Kātyāyana called bhagavan by the Bhasya and by others. We get thus a date for Panini hardly by any chance later than 300 B.C.

The other point of importance in the question of date is the use of Yavanānī (iv. 1. 49), which is no doubt correctly explained as a reference to the writing of the Yavanas, and we cannot well explain this as anything but Greek writing. But Weber's view that this necessarily meant that Pāṇini lived not before 300 B.C. cannot be upheld in face of the fact that the name could easily have reached India before that date, in view of the clear evidence that Greece knew India as early as the Persian War when Indians were included in the invading army, that Pāṇini belonged to the northwest of India, and that Greek coins and gems had found their way to India before Alexander's invasion.\(^1\) Moreover, the insistence by Pāṇini on the existence of Bhāṣā,\(^2\) which must have been the Sanskrit of the daily life of his own class, is a sign rather of early than of late date. Nor can there be any reason to deny that he may have lived about 350 B.C., independently altogether of the legends of the Kathāsaritsāgara, which cannot be accepted as sufficiently serious to deserve weight being assigned to them.

(2) Relation to Yāska.

More important is the fact that Yaska must have known the Brahmana portions of the Sanhita,3 He does not indeed mention it by name, but he cites by name the Kāthaka, just as Pāṇini does, and the Hāridravika from which he cites (x. 5) a passage found in the Taittiriya (i. 5. 1. 1). Moreover, he is full of passages which are parallel to the Taittiriya and look like inaccurate quotations from it or an analogous text; then in iii. 4 tasmāt striyam jātām parāsyanti na pumānsam, which is Kāthaka xxvii. 9 and analogous to Taittiriya, vi. 5, 10. 3. On the other hand, vii. 24 agrees pretty closely with the Taittiriya, ii. 4. 10. 2, rather than the Kāthaka, xi. 10. Moreover, in many other passages he cites portions of the Mantras either of this or some other Yajus text. Important is his clear use of the Kausītaki Brāhmana (xvii. 4) from which comes his citation (i. 9) paryāyā iva tvad āçvinam, and perhaps other citations (xii. 8 = Brāhmana, xviii. 1; xii, 14 = vi. 13; vi. 31 = vi. 13). Roth also in his commentary points to citations of the Aitareya in viii. 4 (= ii. 4); xi. 29, 31 (= vii. 11), and Aufrecht adds iv. 27 (= i. 1. 14); viii. 22 (= iii. 8); i. 16 (= i. 4. 9, &c.).

More important really is the question whether Yāska knew the Gopatha Brāhmaṇa, for it would prove that even a very late Brāhmaṇa which Bloomfield thinks later than the Kauçika and Vaitāna Sūtras is older

in date than we could expect. In the Nirukta (i. 16) is found etad vai yajñasya samrddham yat rūpasamrddham yat karma kriyamānam rg yajur vābhivadatīti ca brāhmaņam. In the Aitareya (i. 4. 9) yajur vā does not occur, and, as Aufrecht 1 points out, the reference to the yajus occurs first in the Gopatha (vii. 6). Again in viii. 22 is found yasyai devatāyai havir grhītam tām manasā dhyāyed vasatkarisyan. The Aitareya (iii. 8. 1) has the text without manasā, while the Gopatha (ii. 3. 4) has manasā dhyāyan vasatkuryāt. These are striking cases and it is difficult to resist the conclusion of Aufrecht that the Gopatha is older than Yaska, a result which is not absolutely irreconcilable with the priority of the Kauçika and Vaitana Sūtras, though it is certainly remarkable. Pāṇini, however, appears to have known the Kaucika and Yaska knows also the Upanisads (iii. 12), and so the knowledge by him of the Gopatha is conceivable. On the other hand, Bloomfield,2 without expressly mentioning Aufrecht's suggestion, holds that in viii. 22 Yaska is like the Gopatha and independently working over a text of the Aitareya. He adds 3 elsewhere that in his opinion the style of Gopatha, ii. 2. 3, makha ity etad yajnanamadheyam is that of the Naighantukas and that the presence of late Paricista verses in that section tends to show that it is later than Yaska. This evidence is not, however, conclusive, and the question still remains undecided, and probably insoluble, as the Gopatha is a much worked-over text and probably of composite redaction.

The date of Yāska is in part determined by his relation of priority to Pāṇini. It is true that Liebich has uttered doubts on this question, suggesting that Yāska really falls into the period of Patañjali; but he has no substantial grounds to offer for a conclusion which is opposed to that of all the other authorities, including Roth, Goldstücker, Max Müller, Weber, Whitney, and Macdonell. This paradoxical result he supports merely by a vague remark that Kielhorn has shown that the development of a doctrine in different Çāstras does not prove the priority in age of different works, a statement no doubt true enough in some connexions. But he adds that Yāska belongs to the fourth Vedānga, or etymology, not to grammar, a statement which ignores the fact that Yāska does not regard his own work as a Vedānga at all, as Roth long ago clearly showed. The name Yāska is known to Pāṇini (ii. 4.63); though this does not prove priority of the author of the Nirukta, that is rendered extremely probable by the fact that Yāska's treatment (i. 3) of the Upasargas is on an infinitely lower plane than that of Pāṇini, and that throughout Yāska stands on a more primitive stage of development than that author.

(3) Relation to the Taittiriya Prātiçākhya.

The relation of the Taittirīya Prāticākhya to Yaska is another possible argument for the date of the Brahmana portion of the Sanhitā. That Yāska knew texts closely allied to the Prātiçākhyas is proved by his reference (i. 17) to Parsadas as a form of literature.1 But it is not certain that he is later than the Praticakhyas in their present form, since the Rgveda Prātiçākhya (xvii. 25) cites him, probably a sign of working over. On the other hand, there is no clear sign of the relation of the Taittirīya Prātiçākhya, which is very probably 2 the oldest of them all. But in any case, as we have already seen (pp. xxxix-xli), that the Prātiçākhyas are older than Pāṇini is most probable; all Goldstücker's 3 arguments regarding the position of that on the Vājasaneyi Sanhitā have been refuted by Weber.4 They rest on the belief that the author of the Praticakhya is the author of the Varttikas, and this belief is wholly unfounded, since in several important respects the two authorities completely differ in opinion on phonetic points. The term jit occurs in both with a different sense; the terms used in the Prātiçākhya (sim, mud, dhi, bhāvin) are not found in the Vārttikas; the Vārttika (on ii. 4. 54) makes khyā have the original form of kçā; the Prātiçākhya (iv. 164) repudiates this view; the Prātiçākhya (iv. 120) provides for the regular change of a mute before a nasal into a nasal; the Várttika (on viii. 4. 45) leaves it optional except in the Bhasa before a nasal affix. Further, the use of udaya as equal to para in Panini (viii. 4. 67) is a clear case of the use of the Prāticākhya terminology, no doubt deliberately. We therefore can fairly add the Prāticākhya as proof of a date before at latest 300 B.C.

(4) Relation to the Sūtras.

The same result is afforded from a different standpoint, the date of the Sutras of Baudhāyana, Āpastamba, and the Mānava. It is true that in their case there is no absolutely conclusive evidence of date. But the number of irregular forms in Āpastamba is certainly a matter of consequence. These forms occur persistently throughout the whole text of the Indische Siudien, v. 103 seg.; xiii. 444. Whitney (PAOS. May 1876, p. xxiii) thinks the Atharox Protigukhya older than Panini.

Crauta, the Grhya, the Dharma Sütras, and it is perfectly fair to say with Bühler that they could hardly occur in a work composed after Pāṇini's grammar had reached its accepted position, say in the time of Kātyāyana, who is probably not later than 250 B.C. There is, of course, no direct proof of that date, but he is certainly earlier than Patañjali and later than Pāṇini, and 250 B.C. is the most probable period. Baudhāyana and the Mānava, which contain similar forms, are clearly older than the work of Āpastamba and carry us decidedly further back, as has been shown above (pp. xlv-xlvii).

On the other hand must be set the fact (p. lxxxvii) that the reference in Apastamba to Çvetaketu of the Catapatha Brāhmaṇa as a modern shows that Aruṇa, his grandfather, also was not very ancient, and he is cited in the Taittirīya Sanhitā (vi. 1. 9. 2; 4. 5. 1). But the term avara is too vague to yield any definite date: Bühler's idea of 150 years is not enough to build on.

(5) The absence of Metempsychosis.

More definite results may be derived from the fact that metempsychosis is not alluded to in the Saihitā. It was a tenet of faith by the time of Buddha, and making all allowances for differences of schools and place, it can hardly be denied that its development must fall in the sixth century B.c., when portions of the Upanisads reflect its existence. It is reasonable to claim therefore a date of at least about 600 B.c. for the Brähmana portions of the Saihitā. This result is independent of the question of the date of the Buddhist texts of the Pāli canon, which has no doubt been placed too high, as it only postulates, what is clear, that the Buddha's system is based on a doctrine of metempsychosis.

(6) Relation to Cākalya.

A further argument can perhaps be derived from the form in which the Mantras appear in the treatment of them in the text. In vi. 1. 2. 6 the second Pāda of Rgveda, v. 50.1 (márto vrnīta sakhyám), is credited with its

^{*} The view, adopted by Bühler, p. xliii n., that the two were contemporaries, is clearly erroneous, and rests merely on the worthless tradition of the Kathāsavitzāgara. It is impossible to identify the author of the Grauta Sūtra and the grammarian. If Pāṇini (p. clxvii) knew the former, we have a further proof of Āpastamba's priority, as Kātyāyana acems the latest of the Sūtrakāras; cf. also Macdonell, Brhadderati, L xxii, who places Kātyāyana not later than 850 a. c.

full count of eight syllables, showing that sakhiyam was spoken, not sakhyam. This is confirmed by the notice in iii. 2. 9. 2, 4, which like the Aitareya (iii. 12) makes ukthám vāci indrāya seven syllables, while the Kauṣītaki (xiv. 3) has avāci indrāya; the late Gopatha (ii. 3. 10) recognizes the contraction. So in the old part of the Aitareya Āranyaka (i.'3. 4) the use of madanty ūmāh without contraction is clear. It is fair therefore to deduce that the Sanhitā was reduced into shape before the orthoepic diaskeuasis which meets us in the present form of the Sanhitā and Pada texts. We are carried therefore to a date before Çākalya, or at least too early to fall under Çākalya's influence, or rather perhaps to a date somewhat anterior, for the evidence of the treatment of final $\bar{a}(h)$ in the Sanhitā and the Pada respectively shows, as Oldenberg proves, that the Sanhitā was reducted before Çākalya.

Çākalya's date is unhappily uncertain: he is older than Çaunaka whose Prātiçākhya repeatedly cites him, and than Yāska who cites him (vi. 28), and therefore again the Sanhitā is carried back to about 600 s.c. With this as a lowest date accords, so far as I can see, all the evidence of the social and political conditions of the Sanhitā, which contemplates a state of society older than that of the Greek period; it is fair to suppose therefore that the Sanhitā is not later than say 600 s.c., and it is reasonable to believe that the date is earlier by at least a century. But further than this we have no right to go with any assurance, and if we assign the Brāhmana portions of the Sanhitā to a date much anterior to 800-700 s.c. it must be purely on hypothetical grounds. On the other hand a date later than 600 B.C. is very unlikely.

The Mantras are no doubt earlier, but their date is wholly indeterminate, for they must contain, apart from Rgvedic borrowings, much that is traditional, and was old at the time when the Sanhitā came into being (pp. clxv, clxvi).

§ 11. THE EDITIONS AND THE COMMENTARIES.

Preserved by the influence of a Pada text and a Pratiçakhya, the text of the Taittiriya Sanhitā possesses no real variants. The text was first completely edited by Weber in vols. xi and xii of the Indische Studien; that edition remains by far the best, and save for a few misprints it is absolutely accurate. The editor added all the readings of the Pada which were required, and, in the second volume, as the edition of the commentary had not then reached the portions included therein some useful extracts from Savana's commentary.

The edition of the text with Sayana, which was begun before Weber's edition appeared in 1871-2, by Roer in 1854, was continued by Cowell, Rama Nārāvana, and Mahecacandra Nyāyaratna, and completed in 1899. The same ground is covered in the Anandacrama edition. Poona. 1900-1908. which gives the Pada text as well as the Sanhita. Neither edition can be said to present an ideal text of Sayana, but there is little in all probability lost: both of course suffer seriously in those passages where other texts are cited by the impossibility of consulting those texts, or, in the case of the later volumes of the Bibliotheca Indica and the whole of the Anandacrama edition, the failure of the editors to do so, even when the texts were easily available.

In addition to the commentary of Savana that of Bhatta Bhaskaramicra has been edited with both Pathas of the text in the Bibliotheca Sanskrita of the Government Oriental Library Series, Mysore, by A. Mahadeva Castri and K. Rangacarya (1894-1898). They have been unable to find any MSS, of the commentary on the fourth Kanda, and in some shorter passages also that of Bhāskara is missing, and is supplied by that of Sayana. The main interest of the text is due to the fact that it is derived from MSS. of the Mysore and Cringeri Math libraries, and shows that these MSS. follow precisely the same tradition as those used by the other editors.

The commentary of Bhatta Bhaskaramiera is very brief in comparison with that of Sayana, to which it is anterior in date.1 It confines itself more closely to a mere gloss on the text, and it omits those long quotations from the Sütra texts which are characteristic of Sayana, and which add to the value of his work. He certainly shows no clear superiority to Sayana as a commentator. He admittedly belongs to the Atreyi Çakha, and in his introduction he quotes the extra two sections of the Mantrapatha which are peculiar to that Cakha.2 The text of his work, the Jnanayajna, is far from satisfactory as reported in the edition, but it is doubtful if much of value is thereby lost. He is very careful to give grammatical explanations of little value.

Sayana's commentary is a very creditable production, showing great knowledge of the Sūtra texts and general familiarity with the ritual, but his versions of the non-sacrificial Mantras are subject to all the vagaries of his Rgvedic work. The work was done prior to the commentary on the § 12. ACKNOWLEDGEMENT OF OBLIGATIONS.

The inception of this book was due to the suggestion of Professor Charles Rockwell Lanman, who asked me to undertake some work for the Harvard Oriental Series. I offered the Taittiriya Āranyaka as a sequel to my work on the Āranyakas of the Rgveda, but he pressed me to undertake the more important text of the Taittiriya Sanhitā. The translation was made in 1912, and on a visit to this country in 1913 Prof. Lanman arranged for the printing and decided the many technical details. To the great loss of this work, he was prevented by the pressure of other duties from carrying out his purpose of reading the proof-sheets throughout in detail, but I have gained much from the use of his writings on Vedic Literature, and in special his Noun Inflection and his edition of Whitney's translation of the Atharvaveda.

The work is primarily intended to render easily accessible the substance of the Sanhitā, and the Introduction and notes are strictly subservient to this end. I have aimed at all reasonable brevity, and for this purpose have in dealing with Rgvedic and Atharvan verses avoided elaborate discussion by reference to the work already done, e.g. by Professors Oldenberg, Whitney, and Lanman. I have similarly curtailed references to the Sūtras by free use of the classical treatises of Professors Hillebrandt, Schwab, and Caland and Henry.

I have endeavoured to express fully throughout my obligations to previous writers, but I owe a more general debt, which I gratefully acknowledge, to the works of my teachers in Sanskrit, the Vedic Mythology and Vedic Grammar of Professor A. A. Macdonell, and the translation of the Catapatha Brāhmana of Professor J. Eggeling. I should also mention the help received from the Rituallitteratur and Vedische Mythologie of Professor Hillebrandt and the Religion des Veda of Professor H. Oldenberg.

I appreciate greatly the facilities for using books granted to me by Dr. F. W. Thomas, Librarian of the India Office, and by the Council and the Secretary, Miss C. Hughes, of the Royal Asiatic Society.

My work could not have attained such accuracy as it may possess without the constant vigilance of Mr. Horace Hart's staff, to whom I owe my most sincere thanks. For help in the compilation of the Indexes I am indebted to my wife.

deity of the cattle, and so Vayu gives them to the atmosphere. Böhtlingk (ZDMG. lvi. 116) suggests that the real reading was originally ardginal, 'ye are departers', as opposed to the following words 'ye are approachers', and he refers the terms to the calves, who are first driven away and then allowed to return after the milking for the sacrifice. Such an error cannot of course be accounted for except on the theory of a written text, and the same hypothesis of a written text is held by von Negelein (VOJ. xvii. 99) as the explanation of the strange yugaçara of KS, and MS., which he thinks is really sugakara. The PW. takes raydvah as from ri, but that is decidedly far-fetched; see Lanman, Harvard Oriental Series, Xi, p. xlii, KS. MS. and VS. omit drjawatth payasrath, and MS. also omits the other three words; they add indrays before devablegim, for which they have blagam. Cf. ApCS. i. 2. 6.

5 This is omitted in MS, and VS,

i. 1. 2. a Thou 1 art the substance of the sacrifice.2

b The Raksas is burned up, the evil spirits are burned up.

c The Vedi ' hath come to the sacrificial straw, Made by Manu, fashioned with the Svadha call. The sages fetch it from in front, The delightful straw for the gods to sit on here.5

d Thou art impelled by the gods.

e Thou art made to grow by the rains.

f O divine straw, let me not hit thee either across or along,

g Let me hit thy joints,

h Let me come to no harm in cutting thee.

i O divine straw, rise with a hundred shoots, Let us rise with a thousand shoots, k Guard from the contact of earth.

m Thou art the girdle of Aditi, the cord of Indrant.

n Let Pusan tie a knot for thee, that knot shall mount me.

1 The parallel texts, KS. i. 2; KapS. i. 2; MS. L 1. 2, differ very considerably in content and arrangement. The Mantras accompany the collecting of the sacrificial straw and its tying with a cord; see TB. iii. 2. 2; KS. xxxi. 1; KapS. xlvii. 1; MS. iv. 1, 2; BCS. i. 2; ApCS. i. 8; MCS. i 1.1; Hillebrandt, New- und Vollmondsopfer, p. 8.

2 ghosad is very obscure: KS, and MS. have gosad, apparently 'sitting among the cows'; the comm. takes it as 'wealth'; probably ghosad is no more than an error for gosad.

The reference to burning shows that some implement must have been heated: the Sutras make out that it is an asido, a sickle for cutting the straw, or a horse's rib, the latter not being heated. The use of fire against demons is world-wide ; see Frazer, Adonis, Allis, and Osiris1, pp. 254 seq.

dhipand probably here means the Vedi; cf. Hillebrandt, Ved. Myth. i. 179-181; Pischel, Ved. Stud. il. 86, quotes Dhişapā as a goddess in VS. i. 19 - MS. i. 1. 7 (see on TS. i. 1. 6), but the Vedi seems more probably meant. The inversion of expression by which the Vedi is made to approach the straw, instead of the straw the Vedi, is not difficult in the priestly terminology.

5 KS. and KapS, here tod dharanti, MS. has tilydrakante or tilyd rabanie, which it explains (iv. 1. 2) as referring to the Dhisana, which all the Brahmanas equate with Vidya. But to d volunti is much more probable and toyd may be a case of a rare Sandhi (Macdonell, Vedic Grammar, p. 66, n. 8); tad is no more than an easy correction.

* KS., MS. iv. 1. 2, and MCS. i. 1. 1. 38 have mádhó mópóri párus ta rdhyūsām, which clearly must have the sense that in cutting the straw the cutter must cut at the joints, not above nor below. It is doubtful whether the accusative is one of the direct object, 'reach', 'hit', or merely one of content, 'as to the joint may I be successful.' Either view is possible; cf. Delbrück, Altind. Synt. p. 176. PW. vi. 322 accept the accusative as one of the direct object but the examples are not decisive, e.g. stomam RV. L 41. 7; sipastutim, viii. 70. 18; kdmam CB. i. 3. 5. 10. Even makhánya girah (VS. xxxvii. 3) may be taken as an accusative of content.

samnahanam.

- o I hold thee up with the arms of Indra, I seize thee with the head of Brhaspati.
 - p Fare along the wide atmosphere.
 - q Thou art going to the gods.

 - h To Agni, to the mighty firmament!
 - i Hail to sky and earth!

 - I Be ye united, that follow holy orders,
 - Ye that wave and are fullest of sweetness,
 - Delightful for the gaining of wealth.
 - m With Soma I curdle thee, curds for Indra.
 - " O Visnu, guard the offering.
- i. 1. 4. a For the rite you two, for the gods may I be strong.
- 1 There are considerable variants in the parallels, KS. i. 3; KapS. i. 3; MS. i. 1. 8; VS. i. 2-4. For the Brahmana, see TB. iii. 2, 8; KS. xxxi. 2; MS. iv. 1, 8; CB. i. 7, 1, 11-21. Mantra a is addressed to the sacrificial vessels, b-e to the pot or cauldron used for heating the milk, and f to the strainer; g is said over the cows as they are milked. In response to the question, 'Which hast thou milked?' the names in k are given; with I the washing-water is brought up in the dohana, and with m the milk is curdled and deposited with w: see ApCS. i. 11. 10; BCS. i. 3; KCS, iv. 2, 19-34; Hillebrandt, Neu- und Vollmondsopfer, pp. 10, 11.
- In VS. paramena dhamma is taken by Eggeling (SBE. xii. 187) as connected with dynhama, but there seems no possibility of doubting the parallelism of "dhayah and dhamma.
 - KS. and MS. have the simpler drain, but the sense must be the same here; the reference is to the mixing of the milk with a drop of water ($\tilde{n}_{TMI}$).
- There are a good many variants in KS. i. 4; KapS. i. 4; MS. i. 1. 4, 5; VS. i. 6-11. The ritual accompanying the Mantras is as follows, according to CB. i. 1. 2. 1; KCS. ii. 3. 10. The Adhvaryu takes the winnowing-basket (curps) and the Agnihotra ladle with the words, 'You two for the rite. He also takes first one and the other with the words 'thee for accomplishment (véja)"; the other texts (MS. VS.) read com here also, not fed. The BCS. i. 4. 5, ApCS. i. 15. 4 apply the first Mantras to the bands, not to the utensils. Then the utensils are heated and the evil spirits consumed. Then the Adhvaryu touches the yoke of the cart which holds the offering and which is behind (i.e. west of) the Garhapatya fire. The Mantra ' I gaze, &c.', is spoken when he looks at the pureddrive, i. e. the rice. &c. ; uri rd/dya is accompanied by casting a blade of grass away. The next Mantras accompany the offering, and the reference to those that have doors is to the sacrificer's house. The offering is deposited with the last Mantra. For the use of d and e in the Soma ritual, see Caland and Henry, L'Agnisjoma, p. 49.

It is impossible to reproduce the play on dhur and dhures.

sisnitamam must literally mean 'most full of gain' from son. But Yaska, Nirukta, v. 1, renders it samendam, while Mahidhara on VS. i. S, 9 takes it as either 'cleanest' from sod, 'purify', or 'best tied' from sod, 'envelope', and in the ritual texts Eggeling (SBE. xii. 15, n. 1) is probably right in seeing the latter sense as intended.

i.e. the offerers partake of the sacrifice as well as the gods.

* drdlyai must have this sense rather than 'non-offering' as Mahldhara takes the parallel drdtaye in VS. i. 11. There it is opposed to bhildya, 'prosperity', rather than 'a (divine or human) being' (cf. Eggeling, i.e.). In KS. i. 4 the contrast is rukṣāyai and arātyai; in MS. i. 1. 5 it is goplihdya and drdtaye.

5 TS, and VS, have khyegam, an injunctive of the signatic agrist of khyd (Macdonell, Ved. Gramm. § 524), while MS. and KS. have akhyam, the agrist indicative. The alternative of indicative and injunctive in such cases is not rare; cf. Bloomfield, JAOS. xxix, 298.

See KS. i. 5; KapS. i. 5; MS. i. 1. 6, 7; VS. f. 12-16; in all cases there are considerable variants. For the ritual use, see BS. i. 6. The Adhvaryu purifies the waters, then addresses them; then sprinkles the offering with water with the Mantra 'I sprinkle you, &c.'; then the implements are purified. Then a skin is shaken out, so that the Raksasea are shaken out, and the skin as the covering of Aditi is brought into contact with the earth. Then the winkhole is addressed and brought into contact with the skin and called the body of Agni. The pestle is called the wooden stone. The millstones (dead-upals) are made to sound. The remaining Mantras refer to the winnowing-basket and the grain which comes into contact with it. The husks are winnowed away and left for the Raksases. See also TB. iii. 2. 5. 2-11; KS. xxxi. 4, 5; KapS. xlvii. 4, 5; MS. iv. 1, 6, 7; ÅpÇS. i. 19. 1; MÇS. i. 2. 2; ÇB, i. 1, 8, 6-4. 23; KÇS. ii. 3, 33-4. 21.

This must be the sense of agrepusal, not 'first drinking' as taken in CB. i. 3.7; Eggeling, SBE. xii. 21, n. 1. Sayana explains the CB. as referring to the fact that water was poured on the Soma (cf. Hillebrandt, Ved. Mych. i. 198) to help to extract the juice from the stems.

² CB. i. 1. 8. 10 explains that the use of this Mantra makes amends to the waters for their being themselves sprinkled with unconsecrated water (cf. Mahidhara on we is rather difficult. Probably the reference is to the puredicipus, the Mantra of the offering, and justum is singular with reference to the separate sprinkling of each portion of the offering. It is also possible to take se as merely a vague ethical dative, referring to the waters.

⁴ The identification of Aditi and earth is complete; cf. Hillebrandt, Adix, pp. 39 et 202.; Pischel, Ved. Stud. ii. 86.

Adhisicanam refers properly to the plank over which the skin was placed and the Soma pressed in the Soma ritual; see Hillebrandt, Ved. Myth. 1. 148. Similarly adri below is another borrowing from the terminology of the Soma sacrifics.

6 The offering is called Agni's body because it is offered in the fire and consumed by it, and it releases speech by letting the Adhvaryu break the silence he observed when about to take the offering from the eart.

7 Cf. KS. i. 6; KapS. i. 6; MS. i. 1. 7; VS. i. 19, 20. The skin is again shaken with a and put down with b; the camed is deposited with c; then the lower mill-stone (dysad) and the upper millstone respectively are addressed. The grain is then poured into the mill, and addressed with the Mantra, 'Thou art stimulating,' and pounded with \(^1\); with the priest looks along his arms. The last Mantra accompanies the pouring of the grain on the skin. See TB. iii. 2. 6. 1-4; KS. xxxi. 5; KapS. xlvii. 5; MS. iv. 1. 7; BÇS. i. 7; ApÇS. i. 21. 2; MÇS. i. 2. 2; ÇB. i. 2. 1. 14-21; KÇS. ii. 5. 2-7; Hillebrandt, Neu-und Vollmondsopfer, pp. 36, 37.

What dhisand really means here is doubtful; Eggeling, SBE, xii. 38, renders it 'bowl', and this may be right. Pischel, Ved. Stad. ii. 86, quotes VS. i. 19; MS. i. 1. 7, as evidence of Dhisand as a goddess of earth, and this may be the sense, but it is decidedly obscure. The use of parastyd in the case of the decade and of parastyd in that of the upald (cf. Pischel, Ved. Stud. i. 108) is explained by the fact that the latter as smaller was deemed to be the offspring of the former (daughter, CB. i. 2. 1. 17; son, GGS. ii. 1. 16; Weber. Ind. Stud. v. 305, n.; Eggeling, SBE. xii. 39, n. 2). For upald, cf. Vedic Index, ii. 374.

* dhanyim means 'grain' (ultimately from dha), but it is clearly here conceived as derived from dhi (hi) 'compel'.

It is certain that propa means 'expiration', not 'inspiration' as held by Oertel, JAOS, xvi. 236; Ewing, JAOS, xxii. 249 seq.; see Caland, ZDMG, lv. 261; lvi. 551-558; Deussen, Phil. of the Upunishads, pp. 276 seq. Apana accordingly means 'inspiration', and wains is an imaginary link between the two; see Vedic Index, ii. 47, 48.

KS, has samptim and the for presettim and dhem, while MS, i. 1, 7; iv. 1, 7 has direphon and presettim semigroup of the presettim is found in RV. iv. 22, 7; x. 40, 10. The dative in dyage is not a dative commodi, but a dative of end contemplated for life; see Delbrück, Vergl. Synt. i. 301.

⁵ Cf. KS. I. 7; KapS. i. 7; MS. i. 1. 8; VS. i. 17, 18. The Mantra a accompanies the taking of the poking-stick; with b the fire is addressed; c is said as the embers are placed on potsherds; d-g and à are used in putting the eight potsherds on the Garhapatya fire, and i and k for covering them with coals and joining them. The first refers to the poking-stick (upaces) which is used to shove the coals on; see TB. iii. 2. 7. 1-6; KS. xxxi. 6; KapS. xlvii. 6; MS. i. 1. 8; BÇS. i. 8; ApÇS. i. 22; MÇS. i. 2. 3; ÇB. i. 2. 1. 3-13; KÇS. ii. 4. 26-38; 8. 16; Hillebrandt, Neu-und Vollmondsopfer, pp. 33-35.

* yacks must have some such sense, which suits dayst. The comm. renders 'give to the gods the purodaya', but that is scarcely the literal sense, which is more precisely 'help us in the offering'.

d Thou 1 art firm; make firm the earth, make life firm, make offspring firm, make his fellows 2 subordinate to this sacrificer.

- Addressed to a kapala. The kapalas make up the gharma or cauldron (as shown by the last Mantra); there are eight and eleven of them used in these rites, the mode of their placing being described at length in Yājāikadeva's commentary on KCS. ii. 4. 37 (Eggeling, SBE. xii. 84, n. 1). It is clear that the dish or cauldron is conceived as broken, probably for the reasons given by Eggeling, SBE, xxvi, pp. xxvii-xxix, that it may resemble the skull with its kapalas (CB, i. 2, 1, 2) and a tortoise (which again represents symbolically the universe), CB. vii, 5, 1. 2. Baudh. Ap. and the other texts all differ greatly in the mode of construction and the use of the Mantra in detail.
- * sajdta indicates primarily a man's relatives, and then more generally his equals generally of whatever rank they and he may be; cf. Eggeling, SBE. xli. 107, 111; Weber, Ind. Stud. xvii. 188, 213.
- ² This applies to the potsherds. The Bhṛgua and the Añgirases are always closely connected with the fire ritual; in RV. x. 14. 6 Bhṛgu, Atharvan, and Añgiras are all united; in viii. 43. 13 Bhṛgu and Añgiras occur together; see also Nirukta, xi. 18; Bloomfield, SBE. xlii, p. xxvii, n. 2; Athareaceda, pp. 9, 10. It is hardly probable that there is any technical sense in the words here, as there is in the Atharvangirases of the later Atharvan texts (Weber, Omina und Portenta, p. 346; Eggeling, SBE. xii. 28, n. 1).

- The kapalas are made to form a cauldron or dish by being closely fitted together. The comm. renders piggad as posakasya, i. e. the sacrificer, which is impossible. The Mantra itself is inserted here, though it is really used at the end of the rite, because it deals with the kapalas. BCS. i. S gives quite a different application to the Mantra by ending it with yaāktina and applying it to the fitting on of the kapalas. But in view of the agreement of TS., KS., and MS. this seems secondary. Baudh, therefore in using the Mantra has altered it to fit the sense by reading
- S Cf. KS. i. 8; KapS. i. 8; MS. i. 1. 8; VS. i. 21-23. The Mantras a-e are used to accompany the pouring of the offering into the dish through the sieve and the uniting of the offering and the waters; the dividing up and touching is performed with f, and a pinds is made with g and put on the coals with h. The two waters referred to are the prayith and the madanti waters, BCS. i. 9. The following c Join ye rich ones with the moving ones, sweet ones with the sweet.

d From the waters ye are born, be united with the waters.

e For generation I unite thee.

f For Agni thee, for Agni and Soma.

g Thou art the head of Makha.1

c Thou art the wind of sharp edge.

Mantras refer to the spreading out of the offering, the formation of a skin (k), the encircling with fire (l), and the cooking of it on the gharma; the Garhapatya is addressed with o, the southern cake covered with the seda with p, and the washing-water deposited with q. See also TB. iii. 2. 8. 1-8; KS. xxxi. 7; KspS. xlvil. 7; MS. i. 1. 9; ApCS. i. 24; MCS. i. 2. 3; CB. i. 2. 2. 1-3, 5; KCS. ii. 5, 10-26; Hillebrandt, Neu- und Vollmondsopfer, pp. 40, 41.

Who or what Makha was is clearly quite unknown as early as the TS. Cf. Macdonell, Vedic Mythology, p. 140.

This is explained by the comm. on KS. ii. 5, 28 to refer to the cake being baked on its upper side by the application of burning straw, whence the cake forms a crust or skin (teac).

These three personages figure in the passages of the Brahmanas cited above when the guilt of the gods in sacrifice is transferred through them to a variety of evildoers (cf. Delbrück, Dis indepermanischen Verseandtschaftsnamen, pp. 578 seg.). Bloomfield (JAOS, xvi. p. exix; SBE, xlii. 521, 522) suggests that the origin of the legend is to be traced to the doctrine that Indra sinned in slaying so many foes, and that Trita, his shadowy counterpart (whether an older god whose place Indra took, or Indra's lieutenant, or a divine sacrificer), was chosen as the scapegoat to bear his sins. See also TS, ii, 5, 1, 1; ÇB. i. 23, 1, where they are connected with the slaying of Tvastr's son, Vicvarupa, by Indra.

 Cf. KS. i. 9; KapS. i. 9; MS. i. 1. 10; VS. 1. 24-28. The section deals with the Vedi. or altar. The priest takes in hand with a the wooden sword (spays) which he addresses with b, and sharpens with c. He then flings with d the sword at or strikes a grass bush (stamba-yajus) which is placed on the altar, and finally thrown away with h on the rubbish heap (utkara), He recovers the spays with e, and flings with f, and looks at the Vedi with g; this is repeated a second time with i-m, and a third time with n-q and r. Then the Vedi is twice solemnly traced out by means of the wooden sword to the accompaniment of Mantras s and w, and with t dug out with the wooden sword from west to east, and smoothed from east to west with v to x; see TB. iii. 2, 9, 1-14; KS. xxv. 4; xxxl. 8; KapS. xxxix. 1; xlvii. - ¹ The epithet decayajani points to the decayajanas, 'places of sacrifice', which it was usual to beg from the Ksatriya before sacrificing. The prayer not to harm when actual severance was taking place is the usual pious deprecation of doing harm which is an established part of the Vedic as of other early rituals. It is at least possible that aghaya so applied to the cow arose from a similar use: the cow is not really killed when offered in sacrifice; cf. the address to the horse in RV. i. 162. 21, and see also Frazer, Golden Bough, ii. 110 seq.
- Of Araru nothing is really known save that he must be deemed some kind of evil spirit, to which are denied both earth and heaven.
- For wais as the place where the cattle move about, rather than where they are penned up, cf. Geldner, Ved. Stud. ii. 282 seq. But the word may mean an enclosure where the cows are, e.g. in

- ÇA. ii. 16 the vraja is closed and barred. Still this does not invalidate Geldner's derivation from eraj, 'go', rather than from vrj. See also Vedic Index, ii. 840.
- Apparently addressed to the Vedi. Cf., however, ÇB. i. 2. 4. 16, where the hole in the ground seems meant. The hole is made by the sword.
- ⁵ This is a constant series of gods and metres, e.g. ÇĀ. i. 7. See Weber, Ind. Stud. viii. 8 seq.; Eggeling, SBE. xii. 80, n. 3,
- ⁴ This is the most probable sense of fta-pri. It is possible, however, that it may be 'support of right'.
- " seu-dhá así is prescribed by TPr. x. 13, where see Whitney's note; see Macdonell, Ved. Gramm. §§ 367, 368. The commnaturally take it as connected with the seadhá cry of the funeral rite, but that cannot be the sense in view of shá preceding.

to Thou art broad, and wealthy art thou.

x Before the cruel foe slips away, O glorious one, Taking up the earth, with plenteous drops, The earth which they place in the moon by their offerings, Which wise men use to guide them in the sacrifice.¹

i. 1. 10. a The Raksas is burnt up, the evil spirits are burnt up.

b With Agni's keenest flame I burn you.

c May I not brush the place of the cattle, I brush thee that art strong and overcomest foes.3 d Speech, breath, eye, ear, offspring, the organ of generation may I not brush, I brush thee that art strong and overcomest foes.

e Beseeching favour, offspring, prosperity, in devotion to Agni, I gird my body for good action.

In this verse jiridanum, which is much easier, is read in KS, and MS, ; jiridanum in VS. 1. 23; and in all probability an accusative should be read, KS, and MS, have tim for ydm; KS, ends anudrcydyajania kavayah, MS. karáyo anudícydyajanta (see von Schroeder's note for the variants), and VS. tam u dhiraso amudiçya yajante. karayah is clearly a meregloss on dhirasah. Virapçin cannot, of course, be taken as feminine as the comm. suggests, and the spaya must be taken as addressed. Even so the sentence is incomplete, the mention of prihirl being carried on by the next half of the verse leaving the former half without a verb. pará krarásya risipak is no doubt rightly taken by the comm. as a reference to Araru; Mahidhara on VS. i. 28 and CB. i. 2. 8. 19 makes it mean 'before the bloody (battle) with its rushings to and fro'; see Eggeling, SBE, xii. 64, n. 3. viroppin apparently literally means 'swelling up', hence 'mighty' or 'great'; see Geldner, Ved. Stud. iii. 147.

² Cf. KS. i. 10; KapS. i. 10; MS. i. 1. 11; VS. i. 29-31, all of which differ very greatly. The ritual accompanying the Mantras is the taking up of the sacrificial implements (sruca, jukā, upabhrt, dhrund, prāciśrakaraņa) and heating them in the Garhapatya fire. Then the pricat brushes the sruca, 'dipping-spoon', with c; the jukā, one of the spoons used for the offering, with d; edcam prānām, the upabhrt with cakyub prārum, the dhrund with prajām posum, while other formulae are given for the other implements. Mantras e-A clearly are spoken by the sacrificer's wife, who is girded by the Agnidhra with a girdle. The rest of the Mantras refer to the diyo or oblation; with & the wife looks at it; with I the fire is addressed by the Adhvaryu, who looks at the diya with m-o; with p the waters are purified, and with q and r respectively portions are taken in the grand and the upabhrt. See BCS. i. 12, and cf. TB. iii. 3. 1. 1-4, 6; 10. 1, 2; KS. xxxi. 9; KapS. zlvii, 9; MS. iv. 1, 11; ApQS. ii. 4-7; CB. i. 8, 1. 4-28; KCS. ii. 6. 46-7. 9; Hillebrandt, Neu- und Vollmondsopfer, pp. 58-62; Schwab, Das altindische Thieropfer, pp. 58-61.

The brushing of the ladles is intended to purify and brighten them. There are three different sets of offering-ladles (sruc as opposed to sruca, 'dipping-ladle'), the jubit, upably! and dkruca, made of different kinds of wood, of an arm's or cubit's length, with a bowl shaped like a hand, and a long spout; see for them Caland and Henry, L'Agnigisma, pp. 253 seq. The use of nijin is deliberate, the spoons are conceived as horses; cf. CB. i. 8, 3, 26, 27; Eggeling, SBE, xii, 68, n. 1.

tanim is decidedly difficult: it might be rendered beauty and taken with accising as the other accusatives must be. But the AV. xiv. 1, 42, which presents the verse in the marriage ritual, has rayon, and so has KS, in the parallel here (which is not in MS, at all). On the other hand f With fair offspring, with noble husbands,

We are come to thee,

O Agni, to thee that deceivest the foe, The undeceivable, we that are not deceived.

g I loosen this bond of Varuna, Which Savitr the kindly hath bound,

And in the birthplace of the creator, in the place of good action, I make it pleasant for me with my husband.1

h With life, with offspring,

O Agni, with splendour again,

As wife with my husband I am united.

United be my spirit with my body.2

i Of the great ones thou art the milk, of plants the sap. Of thee that art the imperishable I make the offering."

& Thou art the milk of the great ones, of plants the sap; with undeceived eye I gaze on thee for fair offspring.

I Thou art brilliance; follow thou brilliance; may Agni not take away the brilliance.

m Thou art the tongue of Agni, the good one of the gods."

n Be thou (good) for every sacrifice, for the gods, for every prayer.

MS. i. 2. 7 has exactly the TS. text, but little stress can be laid on that fact. In the AV. version potyet takes the place of Agnéh and the line ends sain nahyasramftaya kam. See also VS. ii. 6. For the use in the Soma ritual see Caland and versions. The unloosening, of course, is a sign of the end of the rite and is given here because of its being connected in sense, not in order of time; cf. i. 1. 7 k.

Henry, L'Agnisjoma, p. 18.

2 stend as contrasted with tand must mean 'breath' or possibly more widely 'spirit'. Cf. Eggeling, SBE. xxvi, p. xxix; Deussen, Phil. of the Upanishads, pp. 94 seq.; Geldner, Ved. Stud. ili, 116; Max Müller, SBE. I, pp. xxviii-xxxii ; Keith, Attareya Aranyaka, pp. 40 seq.

The genitive with mir capami is partitive; see v. 2. 5. 5; Delbrück, Allind. Synt. p. 160. KS. i. 10 has an accusative with changed sense.

' The reference here is to the fact that the djys is carried from one fire, the Garhapatya, to the other, the Ahavaniya, and so follows the brilliance of the log which is also carried from the one to the other fire; see BCS. i. 12, and cf. ApCS. ii. 6. 3-5.

subhill takes the place of subile of VS. i. 30, 'good caller', which, however, is apparently an error, for CB. i. 3. 1. 19 and the Kanva recension have subada. The other word makes much better sense. The o Thou art the shining, the radiance, the brilliance.

p May the god Savitr purify you

With a flawless strainer,

With the rays of the bright sun.

- q I grasp thee shining in the shining, for every sacrifice, for the gods, for every prayer.
- r I grasp thee radiance in the radiance, thee resplendent in the resplendence for every sacrifice, for the gods, for every prayer.
- i. 1. 11. a Thou? art a black deer, living in the lair, to Agni thee, hail!
 - b Thou art the altar, to the strew thee, hail!
 - c Thou art the strew, to the ladles thee, hail!
 - d To the sky thee, to the atmosphere thee, to the earth thee!
 - c Be thou refreshment to the fathers, strength to those that sit on the strew.
 - f With strength go ye to the earth.
 - g Thou art the hair-knot of Visnu.

VS. is simpler, for it omits deednam; dhdmms is rather 'sacrifice' than 'dainty'; cf. Eggeling, SBE. xii. 74, 98, n. 1.

The different terms apply, the pukra to the juka, the jucia to the upabhrt, and the arcis to the dkrund,

² Cf. KS. i. 11; KapS. i. 11; MS. i. 1. 11, 12; VS. ii. 1-6, all of which differ very considerably. In the ritual, Mantra capplies to the sprinkling of the kindling-wood (idhma) with the sprinkling-water (proksast); b and c to the sprinkling of the altar and the strew respectively; d to the points, middle, and roots of the strew; then with e and f the remainder of the sprinkling-water is poured out; g and A refer to the prastara bunch of grass; i, k, and ! accompany the placing of the middle, south, and north paridhis or onclosing-sticks; mapplies to the making the sun the paridhi on the east side; naccompanies the placing of the southern kindling-stick (samidh), the northern being placed silently; o applies to the placing of the vidhyn, two blades of grass dividing the barkis and the prastara; p applies to the prastore, and the remaining Mantras to the ladles; see BÇS, i. 13, and cf. TS. ii. 6, 5, 1; TB. iii, 3, 6, 2-11; KS. xxv. 5; xxxi, 10; KapS. xxxix. 2; zlvii. 10; MS. iii. 8, 5, 6; iv. 1, 18; ApQS. ii. 8-10; MQS. i. 2. 6; QB. i. 3, 3,

1-4, 16; S. 3. 11-20; KÇS. ii. 719-8, 20; Hillebrandt, New- und Vollmondsopfer, pp. 63 seq.; Schwab, Das altindische Thieropfer, p. 64.

The kindling wood is compared to a black deer living in a lair, but of course with the double sense that it is of dark wood and has its place on the hearth; Eggeling, SBE. xii. 84, n. 1. The sprinkling makes the wood sacrificially pure for Agni; VS. ii. 1 seq. actually inserts in each case justam.

- * The barkir is used to form three of several branches made of Darbha grass, and tied together with a stalk of grass. One is the pajamanamusti, which the sacrificer himself keeps throughout the sacrifice; the prastara is put over the Darbha of the Vedi, separated from the barkis by the vidartie; the paribhojant is the source from which the Adhvaryu takes a handful for each priest and for the sacrificer and his wife, which they use as scats; the reda is divided into two parts, one remains always on the Vedi (called pariedrana), while the other goes from one priest to another; see Eggeling, SBE. xii, 84, n. 2, The barkis is strewn in three layers pointing east, one behind the other; cf. d, and KCS. II. 7, 22-6 with the comm.
- According to Sayana on CB. 1. 3. 3. 5 the prastara is taken from the eastern side of h Soft as wool I strew thee, offering a good seat to the gods.

i Thou art the Gandharva, Viçvavasu (possessing all wealth), the fence of the sacrificer from every attacker, praised and to be praised.

& Thou art the right arm of Indra, the fence of the sacrificer, praised and to be praised.

I May Mitra and Varuna lay thee around in the north with firm law, thou art the fence of the sacrificer, praised and to be praised.

m May the sun in the east protect thee from all evil.

n May we kindle thee, O wise one, the altar near the Ahavaniya fire, and men wear their top-knots in front, i. e. on the eastern side.

¹ This Gandharva is found in RV. x, S5. 21; 139. 4, and also in ÇB. iii. 2, 4, 2; BAU. vi. 4. 18; AV. ii. 2, 4; TS. i. 2, 9, 1, &c. Cf. Macdonell, Ved. Myth. pp. 136, 137.

This is exactly RV. v. 26. 3. KS. has dyimantah, MS. nityahotöram and dyimantah and for c värsisthe ädhi nähe.

For the ridhyti, cf. Caland and Henry, L'Agnistoma, pp. xl, xli.

KS. and VS. have chiamai, but this is much less good in sense, and really is merely an alteration to avoid salma which may have been misunderstood. The mystic significance of the name is world-wide; the name is the essence of the man and so is guarded from strangers; see Weber, Nazatra, ii. 316 seq.; AA. 1, 3. 3.

* Cf. KS. i. 12; KapS. i. 12; MS. i. 1. 13; VS. ii. 8, 9, all of which contain considerable variations. In the ritual, Mantra a accompanies the laying of the hands joined (alignit) on the ground before the two offering-ladles (juki and upabhri). He then addresses the spoons with b and c respectively. Then he steps to the south side of the altar with the left foot first between the fire and the offering and utters the Mantras d-g. Mantras h and i are connected by Apastamba, but i is taken with the next by Baudhayana; the former view is much more probable; the reference is to the place of sacrifice. k-m are addressed to the sacrifice, accompanying the agkars, 'libation of butter'. a accompanies the taking of the ladle, o is said as the Adhvaryu, without letting the two ladles touch, goes north again, and the last Mantra accompanies the mixing of the butter in the dhrund with that in the juhit; see BCS. i. 15, and cf. TB. iii. 3, 7, 5-11; KS. xxxi, 11; KapS, xlvii, 11; MS, i. 1, 14; ApÇS. ii. 13. 2-14. 13; MÇS. i. 3. 1 seq.; ÇB. i. 4, 5. 2-7; KÇS. iii. 1. 16-2. 2; Hillebrandt, New- und Vollmondsopfer, p. 80.

d O upablist, come hither, the god Savits summons thee for the sacrifice to the gods.

e O Agni and Visnu,1 let me not step down upon you.

g Make ye a place for me, ye place-makers.

A Thou art the abode of Visnu.

i Hence Indra wrought mighty deeds.1

k Great, grasping the sky," imperishable.

m Offered to Indra, hail!

o Guard me, O Agni, from misfortune, place me in good fortune.

p Thou art the head of Makha, be light united with light,"

i. I. 13. a With the impulse of strength,

- In VS. ii. 8 the sin is against Vianu only. Agai is the fire and Vianu the sacrifice. The Adhvaryu goes in front of the sruc, behind the middle paridhi, ApCS. ii. 13. 7; KCS. iii. 1. 16-18; and must not touch the prastara. In KS. i. 12 the text reads: anghring vianu (corrected from xxxi. 11 and KapS. i. 12 from vianu of the Chambers MS.) ma vam acakramipam, where vianu must be an elliptic dual; see Delbrück, Altind. Synt. p. 98; Vergl. Synt. i. 41; Macdonell, Vedic Grammar, p. 156. MS. i. 1. 13 has nothing precisely corresponding.
- It matters little if this Mantra goes with the preceding or the following, as the sense is not materially different. The texts all vary: KS. i. 12 has: visnos sthämma ita indro virsam akrnot | ürdhvo adhvaro diviappy ahruto yajho yajhapater | indracan brhadbhās svahā. MS. i. 1. 13 has:
 vieno sthämdaltai indras tishan viryam akrnod devisthhih samdrābhya (with variants samdrābhih samdrābhya (with variants samdrābhyah; see also iv. 1. 14). Then as in KS. with indravānt scácan brhādbhāb.
 VS. ii. 8 has only: vieno sthāmam asttā indro viryam akrnod ūrdhvo adhvarā ásthāt.
- If divispfyam is kept it can only be construed with sameribhya as taken in the translation given above. But it is an error for divispfy. Moreover sameribhya must belong to the preceding Mantra and refers to Indra's action. It is clear from the variant in the MS, that attempts were made to read sameribhyah so as to give a construction with yajātā. The translation would then, adopting the true division and reading, be: 'Hence Indra wrought mighty deeds in his prowess. The sacrifice is (has become) erect, imperiahable, touching the sky, &c.' It is clear that the corruption is old, for the TB. has the same text and explains the object of samārābāya to be the oblation (āgāāra) which is being offered, and says that the sacrificer goes to heaven with it, in utter disregard of sense and grammar.

In taking the sruc as the addressed the Sütras seem clearly in error. The real sense should be the adjectival braidbada applied to the sacrifice, and perhaps section is more original than stdad, which may owe its origin to the separation of the Mantras and the consequent possibility of putting an exclamation at the end of the first part of the Mantra.

The upably: has the foe for its deity (bhrā/repa-devalyd) and so the contents of the juha and the upably! must not be mingled, else the sacrificer would be injured. samaāktām is a clear instance of reflexive middle, rather than a passive; 'let light anoint itself with light'; cf. Delbrück, Altind. Synt. p. 237.

* Cf. KS. i. 12; KapS. i. 12; MS. i. 1. 13; VS. xvii. 63, 64; ii. 16-21. In the ritual the jubu and the upabhyt are taken up with the first and second halves of Mantra a; then the jubu is put to the east with the first half of b, the upabhyt With elevation he hath lifted me up; Then Indra hath made my enemies Humble by depression.

b The gods have increased my prayer. What is elevation and depression; 'Then do ye, O Indra and Agni, Scatter my foes on every side.

c To the Vasus thee, to the Rudras thee, to the Adityas thee!

d Licking the ancinted let the birds go asunder."

g Ye are the spotted steeds of the Maruts.1

h Fare to the sky [1], thence bring us rain.

i Guardian of life art thou, O Agni, guard my life.

k Guardian of the eye art thou, O Agni, guard my eye.

I Thou art the secure one.

to the west with the rest of that Mantra. c accompanies the anointing with the juhu of the middle, south, and northern paridhis or enclosing-sticks. d, e, and f accompany the dipping of the points, middle, and ends of the prastara bunch in the juhil, upablyt, and dhrued respectively. f-h accompany the act of casting a piece of grass from the prastara towards the east. i and k are addressed to the Ahavaniya fire, I to the dhrued, i.e. the earth, m accompanies the flinging into the fire of the middle paridhi, a that of the remaining two paridhis. The remains of the offering are then put into the fire with o. The ladles are next placed on the yoke with p, q, and r. s and t accompany an offering to Agni adabdhāyu. u and v are addressed to the gods and the god who bears the sacrifice respectively. See BCS. i. 19, 20, and cf. TB. iii. 3, 9. 1-12; KS. xxxi. 11, 12; KapS. xlvii. 11; MS. iv. 1. 14; ApCS. iii. 5-8; MCS. i. 8. 1-4: CB, ix. 2, 3, 21, 22; i, 8, 3, 14-9, 2, 28; KCS. xviii. 3. 21; iii. 5. 24-8. 4; Hillebrandt, New- und Vollmondsopfer, pp. 148 seq. ; Schwab, Das altindische Thieropfer, pp. 156 seq.

KS. i. 12 reads ajigrabham for agrabhit, while MS. i. 1. 13 has ajigrabhat. Both agree in having udgrābhác ca nigrābhác ca brahma derán artiráhat. VS. xvii. 63 has prasarah and didhit for dihā in both verses. The accusatives udgrābhám and nigrābham are unquestionably easier; but, if read, they must be in apposition with brihms, not parallel with it as taken by Griffith in his version of VS., for the omission of the co after the third of three nouns is not indeed impossible, but is always rare and doubtful (cf. Keith, Aitareya Āranyaka, p. 200).

² This is very obscure. MS. i. 1. 13 has saptibli and KS, i. 12 artham for aktim. neither reading improving the sense, VS. ii. 16 has vycintu váyo 'ktám rihándh, which Mahidhara renders 'may the birds go licking the anointed ' (prestera). The Kanva recension has ripto for 'ktom. The comm. on TS. explains it as a reference to the birds licking the anointed top and going away, and TB. iii. 3, 9, 3 clearly took rays as birds. Eggeling, SBE, xil. 242, renders VS. 'may (the gods) eat, licking the anointed bird'. apparently in accordance with CB, i. 8, 3. 14. There is considerable variation as to the exact employment of the Mantras; see Hillebrandt, p. 142, n. 3.

³ KS. i. 12 has; marutain przati vara prynir bhūtrā divam gacha tato no vrzim araya; MS. i. 1. 13 has: vara prinnir bhūtra maruta gacha tato no vrzimirata; VS. il. 16: marutain przatir gacha vara prinnir bhūtra divom gacha tato no vrzim dvaha. For przati cf. Pischel, Ved. Stud. i. 226. For vrzi and vrzi cf. von Schroeder, MS. iv, p. 20, n. 1.

- m The fence which thou didst put round thee When thou wast beset¹ by the Panis, O god Agni, That do I bring here to thee that thou mayst rejoice in it, That it be not removed from thee.
- n Go ye two to the place of the gods.
- o Ye are sharers in the remains (of the oblation), well nourished, mighty Ye gods that are on the prastara and sit on the strew [2]. Accepting this supplication, do ye all, Seated on this strew enjoy yourselves.³
- p I set thee in the seat of Agni whose abode is secure.
- q For goodwill, O ye two with goodwill, place me in goodwill.
- r Guard ye the yoke-horses at the yoke.
- s O Agni, with life unhurt, with not-cool body, guard me this day from the sky, guard from bondage, guard from error in sacrifice, guard from evil food, guard from ill deed.
 - t Make our food free from poison, the lap pleasant to sit in; hail!

i. 1. 14. a Ye * twain shall be summoned, O Indra and Agni.

1 KS, has idhyamdnas and esa ned; MS, iv. 1.
14 (the verse is not in i. 1. 13) has vigindnas but yusmad; VS, guhyamdnah and mé (an error for néd). The reference is obscure, though Indra is of course a foe of the Panis (Macdonell, Ved. Myth. p. 157).

Oldenberg, ZDMG. liv. 599-608, makes it probable that this is the sense of phihas. It certainly cannot well mean 'food' (ph) as taken by Klemm, Gwupejikau.

² KS, has paridheyaç for barhişadah and in the third and fourth Padas; yajñasya gopā uta rakpitāras seāhā derā amptā mādayantām; MS, agrees with KS, in the fourth Pada, elsewhere with TS,; VS, has paridheyaç (Kāŋva, paridhayah) but otherwise agrees with TS, adding seāhā vāṣ.

KS. i. 12 has aptriations and VS. li. 20 actions. Cf. Hillebrandt, p. 160. MS. has no corresponding Mantra.

i.e. from the lightning which descends from the sky; didyoh, VS. ii. 20.

* KS. i. 12 has kṛdhi, the older form for kṛṇu, and sudhin youn suṇadān pṛthirim; MS. has no corresponding Mantra; VS. ii. 20 ends suṇdda yonau, which can hardly mean 'in the lap, pleasant to sit in' (Eggeling, SBE. xii. 261) without emendation or the assumption of a base meddi, elsewhere unknown. The reading must clearly be meddin winim. It is worth while noting that the Chambers MS. in KS. has susaddin pythici, just as the MSS. of TS. have susadd yonim.

* This section which has no exactly corresponding sections in KS., MS., or VS. consists of the Yajya and Puronuvakya verses used by the Hotz at certain Kamyestis, sacrifices performed to obtain the satisfaction of some special desire. These Kamyestis are enumerated in TS. ii. 2. 1. 1-5; 2. 1, 2. This section is classed with the last Anuvakas in i. I. 14 to iv. 3. 18 with il. 6, 11 as the plipa-kanda, the 21st, according to the index of Kandas (kandasukruma) of the Atreyi school of the Black Yajurveda; see Weber, Ind. Stud. iii. 375 seq. In the TPr. iii. 9, 11; ix. 20; xi. 8, rules are given for the Yajya portions; see the comm. on iii. 9 (Whitney, JAOS. iz. 98). See also KS, iv. 15; MS, iv. 11. 1.

 May Pasan further our every prayer.

TS. i. 5. 5 2; MS. i. 5. 1; KS. vi. 9. According to the ritual it is used as the puronurally in the Kamyestis described in TS. ii. 2. 1, one for the sacrificer who wishes a child, one to him who has a conflict over a field or with a neighbour, one for a man entering on battle. For the construction vim abundance especially Delbrück, allind. Synt. pp. 412, 413.

1 This is RV, i, 109, 2, and is found also in KS. iv. 15. It is used as the priye in the three Istis described above. The sense is, according to the comm. here, that the son-in-law returns to the father many children (dauhitradiripah projah), and the brother-in-law gives slaves to guard the house and wealth of his beloved sister. More precisely as Pischel (Ved. Stud. il. 78, 79) shows from Yaska, Nirakta, vi. 9, the ei-jamdir is the son-in-law, low in rank or deformed or in some way defective, who has to buy his wife (kritapan), while the cyala dowers his sister to get her off his hands. See also Vedic Index, 1. 482.

2 This is RV. III, 12, 6; SV. II, 926, 1054;

KS. iv. 15; MS. iv. 10. 5; 11. 1. It is used as the purmuedly in the sacrifices by one who has won a fight, who is going to the assembly, and after one has offered the offerings to Püşan and Kşetrapati mentioned immediately after.

² This is RV. vii. 93, 1; KS. xiii. 15; MS. iv. 11, 1; TB. ii. 4, 8, 3. It is used as the payed corresponding to the preceding verse as puronucklyd.

This is RV. vi. 53. I. It is used after the first offering to IndragnI in an additional offering to Püşan to secure success among the assembly (janatā). dhiyi is 'for our prayer', i.e. Püşan is conceived as a chariot, rather than 'to our prayer', for it is parallel with vājasātaye, which is clearly final.

This is RV, vi. 49. 8; VS. xxxiv. 42 (CB. xiii, 4. 1. 15). It serves as the ydjyd for the preceding puromuedkyd. The sense of Pädas a and b is very uncertain; the translation given follows Pischel, Ved. Stud. 1. 11-52, and is probably correct, but it is more doubtful whether Pischel is right in seeing here a reference to the sending of Püşan on a message to Sürya with g By the lord of the field

As by a friend may we win

What nourishes our kine and horses;

May be be [2] favourable to such as we are.

h O lord of the field, the honey-bearing wave, As a cow milk, so for us milk; May the lords of right graciously accord us That which drops honey and is well purified like ghee.

i O Agni, lead us by a fair path to wealth, O god, knowing all the ways; Keep away from us the sin that makes us wander; We will accord to thee most abundant honour.²

k We have come to the path of the gods To accomplish that which we have power to do; Let wise Agni sacrifice [3], let him be Hotr, Let him arrange the offerings him the seasons.³

l What carrieth best is for Agni; Sing aloud, O thou of brilliant radiance. From thee wealth, like a cow, From thee strength riseth forth.

m O Agni, once more lead us With thy favour over every trouble.

Cf. Oldenberg, Rgrada-Noten, i. 400.
Eggeling's version (SBE. xliv. 353) takea the hymn as the subject, but this is almost impossible.

These are RV. iv. 57, 1, 2. RV. iv. 57, 1 is found also in KS. iv. 15; MS. iv. 11, 1; MP. ii. 18, 47; iv. 57, 2 in KS. MP. but not MS. They serve as purosuedlyd and ydjyd for the sacrifice to Kaetrapati which is to be offered when the sacrificer has come to the assembly. In the second verse the accusatives in the third Päda may either be taken with the second Päda or, as in the translation, be reckoned as accusatives of the matter in which the favour (mrd) is to be shown.

This is RV. i. 189. 1, found often elsewhere (KS. iii. 1; vi. 10; MS. i. 2. 13; TB. ii. S. 2. 3; TA. i. 8. 8, &c.). It is used as the puromedand by a sacrificer who has failed to observe either the new or the full moon sacrifice by some error. This is RV. x. 2. 3, found repeatedly elsewhere (e.g. AV. xix. 59. 3; KS. ii. 15 MS. iv. 10. 2). It forms the ydjyd to the preceding puronucdkyd.

This is RV, v. 25. 7; VS. xxvi, 12; KS. xxxix. 14; SV. i. 86. It is used as purpmurakya in the offering to Agni to atone for a sin (awalya) committed by a sacrificer. The sense is not very clear : area may apply either to the singer or to the god (vibhāraso); indeed the comm. suggest that it applies to the god in the sense of honour me by giving me fruits of my sacrifice'. To emend to ared would hardly be legitimate, for the text is intelligible if ambiguous. See also Oldenberg, Rgueda-Noten, i. 324. mahistra makes quite good sense, if taken as illustrating royib, for a buffalo cow would be a desirable object. To take the word as referring to a 'female queen ' is very doubtful, and Roth's view (ZDMG, xlviii. 680) that making is to be understood as mahiser iva is quite gratuitous.

Be a broad, thick, wide fortress for us, Health and wealth for our children and descendants.

- n Thou, O Agni, art the guardian of law, Among the gods and mortals; Thou art to be invoked at the sacrifices.²
- o If laws of you wise ones, O gods,
 In our ignorance we transgress,
 May Agni make good all that,
 He that knoweth the seasons wherein he may satisfy the gods.

PRAPATHAKA II

The Soma Sacrifice

- i. 2. 1. a May the waters wet (thee) for life,
 For length of days, for glory.
 - b O plant, protect him.
 - c Axe, hurt him not.
 - d Obedient to the gods I shear these.
 - e With success may I reach further days."
 - f Let the waters, the mothers, purify us,
 With ghee let those that purify our ghee purify us,
 Let them bear from us all pollution, Forth from these waters do I come bright, in purity.
 - g Thou art the body of Soma, guard my body.

This is RV, i. 189, 2; MS, iv. 10, 1; 14, 3; TB, ii. 82, 5; TA, x, 2, 1. It forms the udjul to the preceding puronucakya.

* This is RV. viii. 11. 1; AV. xix. 59. 1; KS. ii. 4; vi. 10; xxiii. 5; xxxv. 9; MS. i. 2. 3; iii. 6. 9; iv. 10. 2; 11. 4, &c. With the next verse it serves as a purosurakyd and ydyd respectively, at an offering to Agni watapati, 'lord of vows'. The Pada has decad and so the Pada of RV. and in TS. vi. 1. 4. 6; see Weber, Ind. Stud. xiii. 96.

This is RV. x. 2, 4; AV. xiv. 59, 2; KS. xxxv, 9; MS. iv. 10, 2.

Cf. KS. ii. 1; KapS. i. 13; MS. i. 2. 1; VS. iv. 1-5. For the Brahmana, see TS. vi. 1. 1. According to the ritual the Mantras are are used in the ceremony of the shaving of the whiskers of the sacrificer. faccompanies the bathing of the sacri-ficer, g the putting on of his garment, he anointing of himself with butter (naconita), i the anointing with salve (traikakuda if possible), k accompanies the purification of himself by the sacrificer; so also k. The remaining Mantras accompany the entry of the sacrificer into the sacrificial hall by the eastern door; see ApCS. x. 5-8, and cf. BCS. vi. 1 seq.; MCS. ii. 1. 1; KCS. vii. 2. 9-3. 6; Caland and Henry, L'Agnistoma, pp. 12-14.

* decaptab can hardly mean anything but 'obedient to the gods'. The commtakes it as the barber (napita) of the gods, which is not possible. Caland and Henry render 'connu des dieux'.

* éttarăni is vague: the rest of the sacrifice is the sense given by the comm.; Caland and Henry suggest 'les poils ultérieurs'. A Thou art the milk of the great ones, thou art the giver of splendour; splendour [1] place in me.

i Thou art the pupil of Vrtra's eye,2 thou art the guardian of the eye,

k Let the lord of thought' purify thee, let the lord of speech purify thee, let the god Savitr purify thee

With the flawless purifier,

With the rays of the bright sun.

l O lord of the purifier, with thy purifier for whatsoever I purify myself, that may I have strength to accomplish.

m We approach you, O gods,

Ye that have true ordinances at the sacrifice ;

What O gods ve can assent to,

For that we ask you, O holy ones."

n Indra and Agni, heaven and earth, waters, plants."

o Thou art the lord of consecrations, guard me that am here.

i. 2. 2. a To⁷ the purpose, to the impulse, to Agni, hail! To wisdom, to thought, to Agni, hail! To consecration, to penance, to Agni, hail! To Sarasvatt, to Pūṣan, to Agni, hail!

1 i.e. the cows, CB. iii, 1, 3, 9,

For the legend of Vrtra's eye and the salve of Mount Trikakud or Trikakubh, cf. AV. iv. 10. 1 with Bloomfield's note, SBE, xlii, 381, 382; CB, iii. 1. 8, 12.

According to CB. iii. 1. 3. 22 both the lord of thought and the lord of speech are Prajapati. But this is perhaps to press these terms unduly: the gods in question are conceived as definite personalities of a limited sphere of action, not merely as phases of the one god, to which no doubt they can be reduced when desired.

The Mantra is identical in KS, and MS, and the sense must be that of the corresponding yeikama) of the VS. iv. 4. The Mantra is spoken by the sacrificer.

b This is not clear: KS has nothing parallel; MS. has: d to decide imake vanish properly addressed: you decided again; yajhiydeo have make; VS. ii. 5 has the same except that it has agie for again, and Mahidhara, followed by Eggeling, SBE. xxvi. 18, takes yajhiydeah as acc. pl. fom. Caland and Henry take yad again as 'alors que je vous concilie', which is possible.

6 All these are to be considered as asked to aid in the sacrifice. During this Mantra the sacrificer is led by the priest to the place assigned to him south of the Ahavaniya fire. The exact route is given by KCS. as north of the Ahavaniya and Vedi, then between the Vedi and Garhapatya, and then to the seat (cf. Eggeling, SBE. xxvi. 19, n. 3). MCS. ii. 1. 1. 44 also mentions the going north of the Ahavaniya, but BCS. i. 2 is content with a perambulation of the Ahavaniya, (agreen parydalya), and ApCS. x. S. 1 has merely going behind the Ahavaniya, which no doubt implies a perambulation to the north first of all. The last Mantra is addressed to the fire itself.

⁷ Cf. KS. ii. 2, 3; KapS. i. 14, 15; MS. i. 2. 2; VS. iv. 7-10. In the ritual, Mantra a accompanies four oblations, b the fifth oblation, the audgrahama, 'elevating', par excellence, as also c. d refers to the skin on which the sacrificer takes his place, and c is said while he bends his right knee and creeps over the skin; f accompanies the putting on of the girdle (makhald), g the donning of the garments, h referring particularly to the meshes of the garments; i refers to the black antelope's horn; k to the digging up of a clod of earth with the horn folded in the lowest fold of the garment; i to the b O ye i divine, vast, all-soothing waters!

Heaven and earth, wide atmosphere! May Brhaspati rejoice in our oblation, hail!

c Let every man' choose the companionship

Of the god who leadeth.

Every man prayeth for wealth;

Let him choose glory that he may prosper, hail!

d Ye are images of the Rc and the Saman. I grasp you two; do ye two [1] protect me until the completion of this sacrifice.

e O god, Varuņa, do thou sharpen this prayer of him who implores thee, Sharpen his strength, his insight;

May we mount that safe ship

Whereby we may pass over all our difficulties.

f Thou art the strength of the Angirases, soft as wool; grant me strength, guard me, harm me not.

g Thou art the protection of Viṣṇu, the protection of the sacrificer, grant me protection.

i Thou art the birthplace of Indra [2]; harm me not.

stroking of the right whisker with the same implement; m to the staff of the sacrificer; while n accompanies the undertaking of the offering. See BÇS. vi. 3-5, and cf. ApÇS. x. S. 5-11. 6; MÇS. ii. 1. 2; KÇS. vii. 3. 16-4. 8; Caland and Henry, pp. 17-19. For the Brahmana see TS. vi. 1, 2, 1-4, 2.

BCS. and ApCS, clearly take the two Mantras b and c as distinct from the first four oblations; BCS, seems to divide the fifth oblation between the two Mantras. In CB, iii. 1. 4. 5 seq. the Mantra b accompanies the fourth oblation, the Mantra dispayal, &c., being merely uttered without the making of an oblation, so that c is left for the fifth; so KCS, vii. 3. 17, 18, with the comm.

As TS, has it the words dydeapythici urv antarikeam are perhaps nominatives, mero exclamations, and this is quite possible. But KS, ii. 2 and VS, iv. 7 agree in having dydeapythici uro antarikea byhaspitays having vidhema svaha, while MS, i. 2, 2 has ure antarikea. Caland and Henry understand the words to be subjects of cydhata.

This verse (also in iv. 1. 9. 1; v. 1. 9. 1; vi. 1. 2, 5, 6) is clearly a very inferior version of RV. v. 50. 1, from which it differs in the change of rigm to the senseless rigre, in having would for the older vurita, and in altering isadhyati to isadhyasi, apparently in order to render it parallel with puspise. VS, iv. S is precisely as in RV. KS, ii. 2 has eigen but alters both curita and emilia into careta (so also KS, xvi. 7, so that there is no possibility of a mere textual corruption), and reads dywnne and puryons, thus reducing the verse to nonsense. MS. again is precisely like the RV. The instance is important as showing how ready the redactors of these texts were to accept traditional corruptions in total indifference to the sense. The translation given is of course that of RV.; the traditional text would not give any sense, as the efforts of the comm. show. Cf. Weber, Ind. Stud. xiii. 100.

* BCS. ii. 4; ApCS. x. S. 15, 16, allow for only one skin; MCS. ii. 1, 2, 2 seq. allows for two or one, and so CB. iii. 2, 1, 1 seq. But in any case it is not the skina which are the images of the Rc and Saman but the white and the black hairs of the skin.

KS. ii. 3 has quite absurdly ruheyam which is a mere blunder, and disagrees with RV. viii. 42. 3 and both TS. and MS.

- k For ploughing thee, for good crops,
- I For the plants with good berries thee !
- m Thou art of easy access, divine tree. Being erect, guard me until the completion (of the sacrifice).
-  Hail! with my mind the sacrifice (I grasp); hail! from heaven and earth, hail! from the broad atmosphere, hail! from the wind the sacrifice I grasp.
- i. 2. 3. a The thought divine we meditate, Merciful, for our help, That giveth glory, and carrieth the sacrifice. May it guide us safely according as we will.
 - b The gods, mind-born, mind-using,
 The wise, the sons of wisdom,
 May they guard us, may they protect us,
 To them honour! to them hail!
 - c O Agni, be thou wakeful; Let us be glad; Guard us to prosperity;
- 1 Cf. KS. ii. 4; KapS. i. 16; MS. i. 2. 3; VS. iv. 11, 14, 16; vi. 27; iv. 1, which all differ greatly in the exact form of the verses. For the Brahmans see TS. vi. 1. 4. 4-9; iii. 1. 1. 4. According to the ritual, Mantra c is spoken when the sacrificer is going to sleep; d accompanies his being wakened; a the sipping of water; b the drinking of the hot sacrificial milk ; e-i are connected with the bestowing of gifts, the last accompanying the dedication to the deities specified of any (cow) which may be lost or injured (to Vayu), fallen into water or a noose (to Varuna); or have broken a limb or fallen into a pit (to Nirrti); or have been attacked by a snake or a tiger (to Rudra). The remaining Mantras accompany the walking to the place of sacrifice; k is used when he comes on unbridged (?aparyāṇa) water, and is followed by I; m and n accompany the walking forward, but the second part of n is used when stopping where the sacrificer proposes to stay, and the third is addressed to the sun. The last Mantra makes the definite choice of the exact spot for the offering. See BCS. vi. 7-9, and cf. ApCS. x. 17. 9 seq. which differs in the use of the Mantras. In Ap. a accompanies the hand-rinsing, not sipping, and the first part of s is said on awaking. i is used in the case of animals lost (Vayu), dead (Varuna), worn out and unable to rise (Nirrti), slain by Mahadeva (i. e. fever, Budra), while other alternatives are added, viz. animals killed by hail (hrādu) or by a meska (said to be a sort of beast) or fallen into the waters, to the Maruts; those reft by a raiding host (sendbhitrdri) to Indra the spoiler (prasahvan), and those who die of an unknown sickness to Yama. The advance is made in a charlot or while holding a part of a chariot; k applies to crossing waters in the way, I to making a path of clods across the streamlet (which he does even if he actually performs the crossing in a boat). See also MCS. il. I. 3, which agrees closely with Ap. ; KCS. vii. 4. 32-5. 16; Caland and Henry, L'Agnistoma, pp. 25-27.

KS. and the Kanva recension of VS. have ticeadhdyasam for pajidedhasam, and KS. MS. and VS. iv. 11 have satirthd for supdrd.

³ KS., KapS., and MS. all have manujoidh for manejaidh, though it is clearly wrong. VS. iv. 11 inserts the nah pantu and the na-'cantu and has dakeakrateah instead of sudakeah dakeapitarah. Grant to us to wake again.1

d Thou, O Agni, art the guardian of vows, Among the gods and men. Thou [1] art to be invoked at our sacrifices.

e All the gods have surrounded me, Pusan with gain, Soma with a gift,

The god Savitr the giver of brightness.

f O Soma, give so much, and bear more hither.

g May he that filleth never miss of fullness. Let me not be parted with life.2

A Thou art gold; be for my enjoyment. Thou art raiment; be for my enjoyment. Thou art a cow; be for my enjoyment. Thou art a horse; be for my enjoyment [2]. Thou art a goat; be for my enjoyment. Thou art a ram; be for my enjoyment.

i To Vayu thee; to Varuna thee; to Nirrti thee; to Rudra thee!

k O divine waters, son of the waters, the stream Fit for oblation, mighty, most exhilarating, That stream of yours may I not step upon.²

- I Along an unbroken web of earth may I go.
- m From good to better do thou advance.
- May Brhaspati be thy leader;
 Then set him free on the chosen spot of earth;
 Drive afar the foes with all thy strength.
- o We have come to the place on earth for sacrifice to the gods, Wherein aforetime all the gods rejoiced. Accomplishing (the rite) with Rc, Saman, and Yajus, Let us rejoice in fullness of wealth, in sustenance.
- a This is thy body, O pure one. This is thy splendour. With it be united. Win brightness.
- ³ KS. has mandipāmahe, and in the third Pāda: gopāya no aprayuchan; MS. agrees with TS.; VS. iv. 14 has rāksā no aprayuchan, and all three kṛdhi for dadaḥ.
- KS. and MS. both have pupil sanindm some radhasam without a verb, and KS. continues rasreput some bhuye bhara devas savita rasor vasuadad mā prņan pūrtyā virādhişta māham āyuşā varcasā virādhişta. MS. goes on mā prņais pūrtyā virādhista mā vayam dyuşā varcasā on rasreyat, kc. VS. iv. 16 has the simple vasor dātā vase addt in place of vasor vasuadāvā.
- ³ KS, and MS, have tom to md kraminam. The sense is clearly that he is not to step into the water but to get through it by a bridge

- or boat, as the next Mantra says. VS. vi. 27 differs in the second half entirely,
- KS, has in the second Pada: yatra steed ajuquata riggs and samtaranto yajurbhir and rayaspops (clearly wrong). VS, iv. 1 has a similar text, but the correct popena and decaso, which restores the metre of the second Pada.
- Cf. KS. ii. 6; KapS. i. 17; MS. i. 2. 4, 5; VS. iv. 17-20. For the Brahmana see TS. vi. 1. 7. 2-8. In the ritual Mantra a accompanies the pouring of the butter in the dirucal ladle, along with a piece of gold, into the swc; b and c accompany the pouring out of the oblation; d the looking at the oblation by the sacrificer b Thou art the strong,1 grasped by mind, acceptable to Visnu.

c In the impulse of thee, of true impulse, may I win a support for my speech. Hail!

d Thou art pure, thou art nectar, thou art the sacrifice for all the gods.

e I have mounted the eye of the sun.

Blazing with the wise."

f Thou art thought, thou art mind, thou art meditation, thou art the gift (to the priests) [1], thou art of the sacrifice, thou art of kingly power, thou art Aditi, double-headed.

g Be thou successful for us in going, successful in returning.

h May Mitra bind thee by the foot.

i May Pusan guard the ways, k For Indra, the overseer!

? May thy mother approve thee, thy father, thy brother sprung of the same womb, thy friend in the herd.

m Go, goddess, to the god, to Soma for Indra's sake.

n May Rudra guide thee hither in the path of Mitra.

i. 2. 5. a Thou art a Vasvi, thou art a Rudra, thou art Aditi, thou art an Aditys, thou art Çukra, thou art Candra.

in front of the cald. With the sacrificer looks at the sun, the gold being held between; with mantras f to o the sacrificial cow is addressed by the Adhvaryu. See BCS. vi. 12, and cf. ApCS. x. 22; MCS. ii. 1. 3; KCS. vi. 6. 8-15; Caland and Henry, L'Agnistoma, pp. 35 seq.

¹ jir is uncertain in sense; ÇB. iii. 2. 4. 11 seems to connect it with g_f, 'sing', and so 'singer of praises'. This is hardly

The sun seems to be meant. The verse in a different form is found in VS. iv. 32; ÇB. iii, 3. 4. 8, in another context. Caland and Henry suggest taking the form as equivalent to a plural, but without adequate grounds.

Cf. KS. ii. 5; KapS. i. 18; MS. i. 2. 4; VS. iv. 21-23, which all differ in detail. For the Brahmana see TS. vi. 1. 8. 1-4. In the ritual of BCS. vi. 13 Mantra a is addressed in turn to each of the six footprints of the cow. b is spoken over the seventh, and with c the oblation is poured into the seventh in which the gold piece has been deposited. Then a circle is drawn round the footprint and d is repeated, followed by s. The three parts of f accompany the taking of the dust of the footprint by the priest, his handing it to the sacrificer, and the transfer of it by the latter to his wife. g accompanies the action of the sacrificer in securing the looking of the wife at the cow, while h is addressed by the wife to the sacrificer, and i by the sacrificer to the cow. ApCS. ii. 23 differs in assigning i to the wife when she receives the dust from her husband, and h is assigned to the wife looking at the Soma cow, while a new Mantra, trastrmantas te sapema is assigned to the sacrificer. See also MCS, il. 1. 3: KCS. vii. 6. 16-26; Caland and Henry, L'Agnistoma, pp. 37-39, where the action of the sacrificer as to g is ascribed in error to the Adhvaryu.

KS. and MS. agree in omitting pukrási and adding a second rudrási after candrási.

- b May Brhaspati make thee rejoice in happiness. May Rudra with the Vasus be favourable to thee.¹
- c I pour thee on the head of the earth, on the place of sacrifice, on the abode of the offering, rich in ghee; hail!
- d The Raksas is enclosed, the evil spirits are enclosed. Thus I cut the neck of the Raksas.
 - e Thus I cut the neck of him who hates us and whom we hate [1].
 - f With us be wealth, with thee be wealth, thine be wealth."
 - a Gaze, O goddess, together with the goddess Urvact.
- h Let me attend on thee, with Tvastr's aid; rich in seed, bearing seed, may I find a hero in thy presence.

i May I not be separated from abundance of wealth."

- a Let thy shoot be joined with shoot, joint with joint, let thy scent further desire, let thy savour which falls not cause rejoicing. Thou art a home dweller, thy libation is bright.
 - b Unto that god, Savitr, within the two bowls, The sage, I sing, him of true impulse, The bestower of treasures, unto the wise friend; He at whose impulse the resplendent light shone high,

The golden-handed sage hath measured the heaven with his form.

VS. iv. 21 has five in the order: Vasvi, Aditi, Ādityā, Rudrā, Candrā.

- KS., MS., and VS. agree in reading ramnatus and dealer.
- MS. has yajñiya, which is evidently secondary for devayajena. VS. It. 22 has addityas ted and inserts prihiryd before idayas padám asi ghrtávat.
- KS, has asmé ramastasmé te râyo mé râyas táva táva râyas; MS, asmé ramastasme te râyas táva râyas táva tava râyas; VS, asmé ramastāsmé te bándhus tré râyo mé râyo má vayain râyas pôsena vi yaunma tôto râyah, to is clearly a Prakritism for tava and te probably an attempted correction.

KS. has deel and sirvappakhyata; MS. has nothing to correspond.

KS. has sureth reto dadhands tedetermantas ted sapema må ma åyuh promoser mo aham tava etram videya tava samatri; MS, only tedetrimantas (v. l. tedetrimantas) trå sapema. VS, iv. 23 has må . . . samatri as in KS, adding devi before sandri. Probably teastrmatt and trastimant are the real forms; the MSS, cannot be trusted.

¹ Cf. KS. ii. 6; KapS. i. 19; MS. i. 2, 5; VS. iv. 24, 25. For the Brahmana see TS.

vi. 1. 9. 3-7. In the ritual these Mantras accompany the touching of the Soma plant (Mantra e) and the measuring out on the cloth, spread over the oxhide, of the Soma (Mantra b). The first sentence of a accompanies the tying up of the Soma in the cloth; the second the loosening of the knot; then he makes a hole in the cloth and makes the sacrificer look at the Soma with the last sentence. See BÇS. vi. 14, and cf. ApÇS. x. 24; MÇS. ii. 1. 3; KÇS. iii. 3. 2, 7-19; Caland and Henry, L'Agnistoma, pp. 42, 43.

MS. agrees with TS.; KS. spoils the metre by reading satyosacam, while VS. has that reading, but adds karim at the end. There is a variant patim in KS. according to one MS. but matim is much more plausible. unyob according to PW. refers to the two parts of the Soma press; Eggeling (SBE. xxvi. 66, n. 2) accepts the view that the two bowls of heaven and earth are here alluded to. Cf. RV. iii. 55. 20; Hillebrandt, Ved. Myth. i. 171; Ludwig, Über die neuesten Arbeiten auf dem Gebiets der Ryceda-Forschung, p. 87.

4 [H.O.H. 18]

- c For offspring thee! For expiration thee! For cross-breathing thee! Breathe thou after offspring. Let offspring breathe after thee.
- i. 2. 7. a I² buy Soma from thee, strong, rich in sap, full of force, overcoming the foe, the pure with the pure I buy, the bright with the bright, the immortal with the immortal, to match thy cow.³
 - b With us be the gold.4
 - c Thou art the bodily form of penance, Prajāpati's kind, I buy (Soma) with the last offspring of thee that hast a thousandfold prosperity.
 - d With us be union with thee; with me let thy wealth abide.
 - e With us be light, darkness be on the Soma-seller.
 - f Come as a friend to us, creating firm friendships.
 - g Enter the right thigh of Indra, glad the glad, tender the tender.
 - h O Svāna, Bhrāja, Anghāri, Bambhāri, Hasta, Suhasta, and Krçānu, here are your wages for Soma; guard them, let them not fail you.
- ¹ The Soma is strangled by the tying up in the bag, and so the knot is loosened and he is encouraged to breathe. But the tying is also for the sake of children, and both breath and children are neatly combined; Soma is to breathe, and children be obtained, by one and the same action.
- 2 Cf. KS. if. 6; KapS. L 19; MS. I. 2, 5; VS. iv. 26, 27, which differ in detail. For the Brahmana see TS, vi. 1, 10, 3-11, 1, The verses accompany the purchase of the Soma from a Kautsa, 'member of the family of Kutsa'. Mantra a accompanies the purchase; with b the priest hands the sacrificer the gold; c is addressed to the goat; d is addressed to the sacrificer, but the second part to the priest by himself. Then he touches the sacrifice with a white piece of wood with the first half of s. and the seller of Soma with a black knot with the second half, He takes the Soma with f, and places it on the right thigh of the sacrificer with g. h is addressed to the guardians of the Soma. See BCS. vi. 14, 15, and cf. ApCS, x, 25, 26; MCS, ii, 1, 4; KCS, vil. 8. 15-24; Caland and Henry, L'Agnistama, pp. 48 seg.
- KS. and MS. have cikma wit to gob, VS. sagmit to gob. The Bibl. Ind. takes the text as sample to gob, but the comm. has samicinam, which shows that he understood sample as sample, no doubt correctly, see Weber, IS. xiii. 107. The sense may be that Soma is the compensation for the - cow; Caland and Henry leave it simply untranslated. In CB. iii. S. 3. 7 the action seems to be that the Soma-seller is offered gold for the Soma cow, but the gold is later taken away and the seller dismissed with blows : KCS, vii. 8, 27, According to ApCS x. 27. 5, 6, the Soma cow is repurchased by another and sent off to the fold of the sacrificer; if the seller objects he is driven off with a speckled wand. Clearly the purchase is purely symbolical : as Eggeling (SRE, xxvi. 71, n. 1) says, a representation of the purchase from the Gandharvas; Hillebrandt, Ved. Myth. i. S1, sees in it the precursor of Indian drama (cf. Keith, ZDMG. lxiv. 534-536; Charpentier, VOJ. xxv. 308-310).

- ' KS., MS., and VS. insert to.
- KS. and MS. reduce this to saharrapesini prinyanti paraména papina kriyase (KS., KapS.) or kriyasra (MS.). If the TS. is correct, it must mean 'by the last off-spring of thee' (the goat). VS. has only paraména papina kriyase saharrapesini puseyam. TS. is probably corrupt; Caland and Henry, p. 44, recognize that it is impossible to translate as it stands.
- The names are variously given: KS. has seen nabhrát; KapS. seena bhrát; MS. sivää nábhrát and later ástar áhasta kfena.

 VS. iv. 27 agrees with TS. Nabhrát appears to be primitive as it gives a fair sense as nabh- (cf. nabhas) rát, and originally stóna nabhrát may have been read.

- a Up with 1 life, with fair life,
 Up with the sap of plants,
 Up with the force of Parjanya,2
 Up have I arisen along with the immortals.
 - b Fare along the wide atmosphere.
 - c Thou art the seat of Aditi.
 - d Sit on the seat of Aditi.
 - e The bull hath stablished the sky, the atmosphere; Hath meted the breadth of the earth; Hath set him in all worlds as king. All these are Varuna's ordinances.
 - f He hath stretched out the sky over the woods;
 He hath placed strength in horses, milk in kine;
 Varuna hath set skill in the heart [1], Agni in dwellings,
 The sun in the sky, the Soma on the hill.
 - g Thee, all-knowing god, Thy rays bear upwards, The sun for all to see.⁵
 - h Come hither, ye oxen, strong to bear the yoke, Tearless, slaving not man, furthering the prayer.
 - i Thou art the pillar of Varuna.
 - k Thou art the prop of Varuna's pillar."
 - l Varuna's noose is tied.
- 1 Cf. KS. ii. 6, 7; KapS. i. 19; ii. 1; MS. i. 2. 6; VS. iv. 28, 30, 81; vii. 41; iv. 33, 36. For the Brahmana see TS. vi. 1, 11, 1-4. In the ritual Mantra a accompanies the taking up of the Soma, b is addressed to the cart which is used to bear the Soma and which is already yoked. A skin of the black antelope is spread on it with c, and the Soma is placed on the skin with d. With e he worships Soma, and covers it with a cloth with f. He ties the skin in front with the next Mantra g, which belongs to Sûrya and so to the east (= front), and addresses h to the oxen which draw the cart. He yokes the right-hand beast with i, puts the yokepin in with k, and puts on the halter (yoktra) with I. See BCS. vi. 15, and cf. ApÇS. x. 27. 9-28. 2; BÇS. ii. 1. 4; KCS. vii. 9. 1-26; Caland and Henry, L'Agnistoma, pp. 48, 49.
- ² KS. has aid rasenasizadhinam and vysjud for çuiymena. MS. has dhâmna for çuiymena, while VS. has after a completely different

- first half-verse úd áyuşű scáyúsódasthám amttáú ánu.
- This is RV. viii. 42. 1, with anno viguinedal, altered to reable antarikeam. So VS. and MS., but KS. has regravedal.
- 4 This is RV. v. 85. 2 with againsydeu and vikyti for usriydeu and agai. VS. iv. 31 has vikyti but usriydeu; KS. agrees with TS., but MS. has dikyti. The RV. seems clearly earlier.
- * RV. i. 50. 1.
- KS. has dhūrbūdhā ārārahanā anaççā (v. l. anaçrā) brahmacödanau; VS. inserts yujyēthām before anaçrā. The anaçrā apparently means 'tearless', i.e. 'glad', but anaç-çā ('burden-swelling', or 'overcoming') is possible, and so is anaç-çā, and both are more likely to have been corrupted than anaçrā. For the variant dhāraṣdhau cf. Lūders, Die Vyāsa-Çikshā, p. 51.
- [†] skumbhasárjanam is found also in MS.; VS. iv. 36 has the dual skambhasárjani, KS. skámbhani (sing.). It cannot mean a

i. 2. 9. a Move 1 forward, O lord of the world,

To all thy stations.

Let no opponent find thee,

Let not robbers find thee;

Let not the evil-working wolves (find) thee;

Nor the Gandharva, Vicvavasu, injure thee.3

b Become an eagle and fly away to the place in the house of the sacrificer which we have prepared with the gods (for thee).³ Thou art the good luck of the sacrificer.

c We have reached the path

Which leadeth to bliss, without a foe,

Whereby a man defeateth all his foes and winneth wealth."

d Honour to the radiance of Mitra and Varuna. This worship, this reverence offer to the god; To the far seeing, god-born, the banner, The son of the sky, the sun, do ye sing."

g Varuna's noose is loosened.

i. 2. 10. a Thou art the hospitality of Agni. For Visnu thee! Thou art the hospitality of Soma. For Visnu thee! Thou art the hospitality of the particular kind of pillar as taken in MW. But it must refer in all probability as taken by the Sütras to the pin (gampi). In the case of the VS. two pegs which keep the prop of the pole of the cart steady (ÇB. Ili. 3. 4, 25) are meant.

1 Cf. KS. ii. 7; KapS. ii. 1; MS. l. 2. 6; VS. iv. 34, 29, 35, 36. For the Brahmana see TS. vi. 11, 4-6. The Mantras are used to accompany the progress of Soma to the hall or hut of sacrifice (prdemanance), a and b to samskytom accompany the moving forward of the Soma wagon. With the rest of b and c the sacrificer and the Adhvaryu advance towards the Soma, and d is addressed as the Soma is brought up to the hall. e is addressed to the wagon, and f and g accompany the taking out of the pin (campa) and the removal of the yoke. See BCS, il. 16, and cf. ApCS. x. 29, where a, b, and c are divided as in Weber's text of the TS, and b is addressed to Soma instead of being divided between a and c as in the BCS. See also MCS. ii. 1. 5; KCS. vii. 7.9-21; Caland and Henry, L'Agnizioma, pp. 51, 52. 1 KS. and MS. have bisseancepate. KS. has må ted pariparine ridan må paripanthine må ted vika aghäpise vidan, and it omits the reference to the Gandharva, and MS, only differs by omitting the first vidan. VS. has the fullest form må ted pariparine vidan må ted paripanthine vidan må ted vika aghåpise vidan, but also omits the Gandharva. In the TS, the omission of the second ted would improve the metre, which the comm. calls a parpada atijagati.

KS. and MS. agree in omitting devité, which is difficult to render. MS. adds developade sutydyai. VS. has gradu gachatim nau samistrim. The comm. calls the verse an Anustubh.

⁴ This is RV. vi. 51. 16, but with agasmahi for aganmahi. KS. li. 6 and MS. i. 2. 5 have aganmahi, while VS. iv. 29 begins pratipanthim apadmahi. Cf. Macdonell, Ved. Gramm. pp. 367, 379, n. 8.

This is RV, x. 37. 1 and is curiously without variant in KS., MS., or VS. iv. 35, despite the strange mahé desdya.

⁶ Cf. KS. ii. 8; KapS. ii. 2; MS. i. 2, 6, 7; VS. v. 1; iv. 37; v. 5. For the Brahmana see TS. vi. 2. 1. 2-2. 4. The ritual is that of the guest-offering to Soma when he stranger. For Viṣṇu thee! For Agni thee, giver of wealth, for Viṣṇu thee; for the eagle, bringer of the Soma, thee, for Viṣṇu thee!

b Thy powers which they honour with oblation,

May they all envelop the sacrifice!

Giver of wealth, impeller, rich in heroes,

d Thou art Varuna who guardeth law; thou art of Varuna.

e Be prosperity ours from our friendship with the gods. May we be not severed from our service of the gods.

f For him who rushes on I seize thee; for him who rushes around I seize thee; for Tanunapat I seize thee; for the mighty I seize thee; for the mightiest in strength I seize thee.

g Thou art unapproached, the unapproachable might of the gods, guarding from imprecations, impervious to imprecations.

h May the lord of consecration approve my consecration, the lord of penance my penance. Speedily may I attain truth. Place me in good fortune.

i. 2. 11. a May thy every shoot, O god Soma, swell, arrives at the hall, just as a human guest is honoured on arrival. The first Mantra accompanies five oblations, while the ox is loosened. Then the sacrificer takes the Soma from the cart with b, and carries it inside by the eastern door. The first part of c is used for stretching a hide over the seat (deand) which is put on the south side of the Ahavaniya fire, and the rest accompanies the depositing of Soma on that seat. d is addressed to the Soma. The first part of e accompanies the fastening of the ends of the hide to the beam of the hall, the second the spreading between the western feet of the seat. f applies to the ceremony of the Tanunaptra, a covenant made by the sacrificer and the priests in the name of Tanunapat, by which they pledge themselves not to injure each other: it is said while taking the butter. gis said as the priests touch the sacrificer, and A is said by the sacrificer to secure prosperity in his consecration. See BCS. vi. 16-19, and cf. ApCS. x. 29-xi. 1; MCS. ii. 1, 5-2, 1; KCS, vii. 29-viii. 1; Caland and Henry, L'Agnistoma, pp. 58 seq.

This is RV. i. 91, 19 without variant. Both Grassmann and Ludwig prefer afficials. which is much easier, but the alteration is inexplicable and the sense better with an accus. : see Oldenberg, Ryseda-Noten, i. 90, who defends both paribhah and asta, which clearly is 'attracted' into the number of the predicate.

This Mantra is peculiar to the TS. Despite the accent apis must here be a noun. Cf. Macdonell, Ved. Gramm. p. 113.

VS. has pikrane; MS. and Vait. xiii. 16-18 pikmana öjiethöya. KS. and VSK. agree with TS.

* abhiçastipāh is used, like several other similar forms, as a sort of neuter nom., there being no characteristic neuter of a form in a. Cf. Lanman, Noun-Inf. p. 445. VS. adds abhiçasti before abhiçastipā, and Vait. replaces the last word by anabhicastih (anabhiçasti, AÇS. iv. 5. 3).

KS. and MS. have upāgām, one of the common variants of the Sanhitäs; Bloomfield, JAOS. xxix. 294; AJP. xxxiii, 1 seq.

Cf. KS. ii. 8; KapS. ii. 2, 8; MS. i. 2. 7; VS. v. 6-8. For the Brahmana see TS. vi. 2. 2. 4-7. The Mantras are used as follows: a is said by all the priests while the Soma is being made to swell; b is repeated by the sacrificer only; c is spoken by them all on the pressure, which For Indra who gaineth the chiefest wealth;1 May Indra swell for thee:

b Make thy comrades to swell with wealth and skill; with good fortune may I accomplish thy pressing, O god Soma.

c Desired are riches exceedingly for food, for prosperity. Be right to the proclaimers of right. Honour to the sky, honour to the earth!

d Agni, lord of vows, thou art the vow-lord of vows; this body of mine be in thee [1], that body of thine be in me. Together, O lord of vows, be the vows of us two that keep vows.

e Thy dread form, O Agni, with that protect us; hail to that form of thine !"

f That form of thine, O Agni, which rests in iron, which rests in silver, which rests in gold, the highest, that dwells in the cleft,

i. 2. 12. a Thou art the abode of riches for me; thou art the resort of the

is not on this occasion thrown into the fire; d and e are spoken by the sacrificer at the intermediate consecration (aran/aradiked); f and g accompany a libation by the Adhvaryu, the so-called Upasaddhomah; there are three Upasad days and on each the formula is varied by the use of the epithets ayaçaya, rajaçaya, and hardçayd respectively. See BCS. vi. 19-21, and cf. ApÇS, xi. 1-8; MÇS, ii. 2, 1; KCS. viii. 2, 4-38; Caland and Henry, L'Agnisioma, pp. 68-77.

1 MS. and VS. likewise have this form, but KS. has ekadhana only (in hiatus).

3 MS. agrees, but KS. has cratinam, which can hardly be correct in view of nou. The passage is approximately metrical. For wats, perhaps 'course', see Whitney, JAOS. XI. CCXXIX.

5 KS. has tasyai, which is easier, and so has VS. has the correct ayançaya, rajahçaya, and haraçaya; cf. Macdonell, Ved. Gramm, p. 71.

KS. and VS. agree in the easier deadhit, while MS. has "dhip.

Cf. KS. ii. 9; KapS. ii. 3; MS. i. 2. 8; VS. v. 9-13. For the Brahmana see TS. vi. 2. 7. 2-8. 6. The Mantras are used to accompany the marking out of the high altar (ulturacedi), which is to the east of the great altar (mahareds). a is used when the lines of the altar are drawn; as to the name there is division of opinion; Baudhāyana holds that b and c down to namnchi refer to the striking of the earth of the pit (cateala) with the wooden sword (sphya), and the rest of c to the placing of the earth dug up by the wooden sword on the altar. Apastamba. on the other hand, like the Brahmana, vi. 2. 7. 2, 3, makes one Mantra out of b and c; d in any case accompanies the second (and third) repetitions of the action in e; e, according to Baudhayana, refers to the mixing up (samprayauti) of the rubble (purisa) on the altar, according to Apastamba, to the depositing of the earth on the altar (the earth in his view coming not from the cateata but from the eastern side of the great altar). f. g. and h all refer to altars, and accompany the spreading out of the earth, the besting down of it, the washing of it, and the rubbing it with sand (siketd); if accompanies the sprinkling of the altar with the probabl waters; k accompanies five agharas; I the taking up of the sruc; m the placing of the paridhis, and n the placing of the apparatus (guggudu sugandhitejanam çuktām urņāstukām). See BCS. and cf. ApCS. vii. 8; MCS. i. 7. 3. 14 seq. ; KCS, v. 8, 25-4, 17.

 The priests of the mighty wise priest;

1 tiktdyani must be equivalent to taptdyani, which is the version of VS., KS., and MS. VS. has nothibids and synthitis.

than vidét of VS, and KS. VSK, has agree and MS. agree, keeping vidét. Sayana renders vidét as if it were vedet. But clearly it is only a case of a nom. with the sense of a voc. Agni is addressed, as well as the object, but in the trans, the VS, version is followed for convenience.

3 4 dadhe seems to refer more naturally to lifting up the earth after breaking it up with the wooden sword than to depositing it as Baudhäyana and Kätyäyana take it, followed by Eggeling, SBE. xxiv. 118. The Brähmans, vi. 2. 7. 3, leaves it vague, and of course a taking preparatory to a depositing is possible.

4 The gods are meant according to vi. 2. 8. 3. ⁰ Cf. KS. ii. 10; KapS. ii. 4; MS. i. 2, 9; VS. v. 14-21. For the Brahmana see vi. 2, 9, 1-4. This section deals with the sacrificial carts and the shed for them, the Havirdhana. Mantra a is used to accompany the offering of a libation of butter to Savitr in the old Ahavaniya fire, b is used in the case of one of the carts creaking, as it is being moved to the place of the shed; c is taken by the comm. with b, but in some authorities (Man. Kath. Kat, Hir.) it is taken with d, and Baudh., Bhar., and Ap. do not give it any application at all; d accompanies the ancinting of the carts

c Ye two, famed among the gods, make proclamation among the gods.

by the wife of the sacrificer with a quarter of the dust of the foot of the cow by which the Soma is purchased; e accompanies an offering in the track on the right of the right cart, and f in the left track of the left cart ; g is said while the carts are brought forward, the last sentence refers to their being fixed in their place to the west of the Ahavaniya (the old Ahavaniya now becomes the Garhapatya); h and i accompany the propping of the carts with props which are placed at the karnaturda of the carts, i.e. the right and left ends of the yoke where they are connected with the poles; then a shed is built : six posts are put in south and north before and behind the carts, then over them are placed lintels; a garland of Darbha grass is placed on the front door of the shed, and it or the beam on which it rests accounts for Mantra k, the 'back' refers to the placing of the middle covering over the two beams (east and west); I applies to the two other coverings (chadis), one on either side of the middle one; m to the sewing of the covering to the framework; n to the making of a knot firmly, and o is addressed to the shed when complete. See BCS. vi. 24, 25; ApCS. xi. 6, 7; MCS. ii. 2, 2; KCS. viii. 3, 29-4, 21, and cf. Caland and Henry, L'Agnistoma, pp. 80-92; Eggeling, SBE, xxvi. 124 seq.

MS. has bahávo 'nufiran and adda before yam, abhiçastipā anabhiçastenyah; cf. ĀÇS. i. 11. 1 yam bahava upajīvanti yo janānām asad vaņi.

3 MS. has, absurdly, padd.

MS. and VS. agree in having vy askabhrd and vivna; and dadhartha, while KS. vyastabhnd. KS. also has manuse. VS. has yaçasyd. RV. vii. 90. 3, the prototype, has manuse yaçanya, vy astabhna, vivna dadhartha.

5 jihraratam is the reading of the TS. not jiho as in VS. (correct in Concordance); see Whitney, Roots, p. 210. It is more probably intrans, than trans.

awkward and shows some confusion of text in TS. which the other versions variously remove by making antirities the third division.

- The other Sanhitas have enapter read here by D, except MS., which has gipre, rather likely to be a mere correction of the less easy enapter; cf. Macdonell, Ped. Gramm. p. 56; Weber, Ind. Stud. xiii, 107; Lüders, Die Vydsa-Çikshd, p. 53.

- For ibha, cf. Vedic Index, i. 79, 80. drandada presents difficulties: it occurs also in MS. ii. 4. 2, where it is used of the effects of the Surā, and where 'injure' rather than 'hurt' must be the sense. Possibly then hrundii should be read (there is a v. i. drundii), but not here. The sense 'hurrying' cannot be got from dru, but the Dhātapājāa, xxvii, 33, has in one reading a verb dranoti, 'to kill' or 'to go'. Cf. Oldenberg, Raveda-Noten, i. 269.

 That dost surpass the glories of men.
- k He who with good steeds and rich in gold Approacheth thee, O Agni, with a rich chariot, His protector thou art, the comrade of him Who duly offereth thee glad reception.
- I The great I overcome [4] through kinship and my songs; That hath descended to me from Gotama, my sire; Pay heed to this song of ours, O Hotr, most youthful, skilful, friend of the house.
- M Sleepless, speedy, propitious, Unwearied, never hostile, unexhausted,
 May thy guardians, O Agni, taking their places here united, Protect us, O wise one.
- Oldenberg, i. 270, seems clearly right in abandoning the view (SBE, xlvi, 331) that vi dire can possibly refer 'to the house', and in seeing in the verse a mixture of the ideas of revealing the treasures of the greedy man (cf. ZDMG, liv. 174; Geldner, Ved. Stud. iii. 92). The sense is: he vi dyaut days from the miser and bestows them on the pious.
- ² in is, I think, rather the will of the god than the prayer of the sacrificer, or, as Sayana thinks, the sacrifice itself. In his RV. comm. Sayana takes sudind as an adjective.
- ³ phost is not easy: it may of course be taken as the 3rd sing. nor. of phus (Macdonell,

- Ved. Gramm. p. 368), but that is hard to make sense of, and as an adverbially used acc. it is more simple of construction; cf. RV. vi. 5. 6. See however, Poy, JAOS. xxvii. 406.
- desdroster is usually rendered 'by night and day', but the sense 'shining in the dark' is more probable; see Oldenberg, i. 1. sipa tmas is decidedly curious.
- * maké rujami is not easy. Geldner, Rgreda-Kommentar, p. 64, thinks that, if correctly handed down, makéh must be taken with vácobhíh, and the passage must refer to the splitting of the rocks in the Pani legend by the seven Rsis of whom Gotama, the father of the singer, was one.

- n Thy guardians, O Agni, who seeing, Guarded from ill the blind Mamateya, He of all wisdom guarded these kindly ones; The foes that were fain to deceive could not [5] deceive.¹
- o In unison with thee, aided by thee, Under thy leadership, let us gain strength; Fulfil both our desires, O truthful one; Perform it forthwith, O fearless one.²
- p With this fuel, O Agni, will we serve thee; Accept the song of praise recited for thee; Burn those that revile, the Raksases; guard us, From the foe, the reviler, O rich in friends, from blame.
- q I touch the steed that slayeth the Raksases;
 I go for shelter to the friend most spreading;
 May Agni, enkindled with our offerings, sharpening (his dart) Guard us by day, [6] from harm and by night.
- With great radiance Agni shineth;
 All things doth he reveal by his might;
 He overcometh godless and malign enchantments;
 He sharpeneth his horns to pierce the Raksas,
- s Let the roarings of Agni rise to the heaven, Sharp weapons to slay the Raksas; In the carouse his radiance bursteth forth; The godless assailers cannot restrain him.

The Victim for Agni and Soma

- Geldner thinks the is an attraction for think (cf. SB. Berl. Akad. 1904, p. 1097), but Oldenberg, i. 147, abandons this view. The verse is i. 147. 3.
- ² pssiad: it is difficult to be certain if praises or curses are referred to, and what are the two kinds. Geldner suggests the sacred and profane praise, which may be correct. For the double sense of cass of Charpentier, VOJ. xxiv. 364.

taking up of the spade, and the spade itself is addressed in the last two clauses; then a line is drawn round with b and c; d accompanies the anointing of the post (sthind), apparently in three places, top, middle, and bottom according to Ap.; c accompanies the pouring of water in the trench (acata); f the scattering of barley in the water; g the strewing of the barhis; h is addressed to the post as it is lifted up; i applies to it as it is put in the ground, and k to it being propped up with earth on all sides, and t to the beating down of the earth; the post is anointed with a libation to the accom-the hands of Pusan, I take thee; thou art the spade, thou art the woman.1

- b The Raksas is encompassed, the evil spirits are encompassed, here do I cut off the neck of the Raksas.
 - c He who hates us and whom we hate, here do I cut off his neck.

 - e Pure be the world where the Pitrs sit.
 - f Thou art barley (yáva); bar (yaváya) from us foes, bar evil spirits.
 - g Thou art the seat of the Pitrs.
 - h Support the sky, fill the atmosphere, make firm the earth.
- i May Dyutāna Māruta³ set thee up according to the established law of Mitra and Varuna.
- k Thee that art winner of Brahmans, winner of nobles, winner of fair offspring, winner of increase of wealth, I close in.
- I Strengthen the Brahmans, strengthen the nobles, strengthen offspring, strengthen increase of wealth.
 - m With ghee, O sky and earth, be filled.
 - n Thou art the seat of Indra, the shade of all folk.
 - o May these our songs, O lover of song, Encompass thee on all sides, Strengthening thee whose life is strong; May they be dear delights.

paniment of m; n is used according to Baudhāyana to accompany the placing on the roof of the midmost of the nine coverings (chadis), the second sentence applying to the two side ones (the roof being made up of three rows, south, middle, north, each of three mats) : but the Brahmans for once does not follow the text but evidently adopts as the text aindrain asi viçvojanásya cháyd, which it applies also to the putting on of the chadis; Apastamba agrees, and the later Taittiriyas generally adopt a threefold division, adding indranga saido 'si, and applying the three Mantras to the placing on of the middle row, the south and the north rows of the chadis respectively; o refers to the packing of the interstices of the chadis; p to the sewing of the hurdles to the door-posts to enclose the Sadas (cf. i. 2. 13 m, n; there is no good reason for making two Mantras there and one here), while q and r refer to the completed Sadas. See BCS. vi. 26, 27; ApCS. xi. 9, 10; MCS. ii. 2. 3; KCS. viii. 5. 38-6. 12, and cf. Caland and Henry, L'Agnisjoma, pp. 94 seq.; Eggeling, SBE. xxvi. 140-147.

- So also KapS., VS., and, in the best MSS., MS., but KS. has yāraya.
- MS. has nitānās teā mārutē ni hantu mitrāvaruņau dhruvēņa dhārmaņā and KS. the same with mitrāvaruņayar as in TS. For Dyutāna of. Vedic Index, i. 382.
- KS. and MS. simply have viçvajanasya chayd. There is the usual doubt as to the sense of jana, 'man', or 'folk' (Vedic Index, i. 269-271).

- i. 3. 2. a I dig those which slay the Raksas, which slay the spell, which are of Visnu.
 - b Here do I cast out the spell which an equal or an unequal hath buried against us.
 - c Here do I overthrow him who equal or unequal is ill-disposed to us.
 - d The spell is overcome by the Gayatri metre.
 - e What is here? Good. Let it be ours.

f Thou art Virāj, slaying our rivals; thou art Samrāj, slaying our foes; thou art Svarāj, slaying the enemy; thou art Viçvarāj, slayer of all destructive things [1].

- g I sprinkle those which slay the Raksas, which slay the spell, and which are of Visnu.
- h I pour down those which slay the Raksas, which slay the spell, and which are of Visnu.
 - i Thou art barley (yava); bar (yavaya) from us foes, bar evil spirits.
- k I bestrew those which slay the Raksas, which slay the spell, and which are of Visnu.
- I pour the libation over those which slay the Raksas, which slay the spell, and which are of Visnu.
- m I lay down the two which slay the Raksas, which slay the spell, and which are of Visnu.3
- n I surround the two which slay the Raksas, which slay the spell, and which are of Visnu.
- o I bestrew the two which slay the Raksas, which slay the spell, and which are of Visnu.
- 1 Cf. KS. ii. 11; KapS. ii. 5; MS. i. 2. 10; VS. v. 23-25, 22. For the Brahmana see TS. vi. 2, 11, 1, 2. This section deals with the Uparavas, 'sound-holes', which are dug under the shafts of the southern of the two earts, four in number. Mantra a accompanies the scooping out of the earth; the earth is then thrown out of the hole with b-d under the feet of the sacrificer, the word gayatrena being varied with trainfubbena, jägatena and anustubbena according to the directions; e is used in a dialogue: the sacrificer asks the Adhvaryu what there is, and the latter replies, the sacrificer then finishing the Mantra ; f is addressed to the four holes in turn; with g they are sprinkled, and with A the water over is cast down into them; i is said when barley is poured over them, & when the barhis is strewed, and I accompanies a libation; in refers to the laying down of the plants for the pressing; n to their being surrounded with earth, and o to the strewing of the barhis; p is addressed to them, and q when the skin and the plants are being struck with a stone. See BÇS. vi. 28, and cf. ApÇS. xi. 11; MÇS. ii. 2. 3; KÇS. viii. 5. 7-25; Caland and Henry, L'Agnistoma, pp. 100-104.

The spell is explained in the comm. (Bibl. Ind. p. 456) as jirnakajapajādhikhandabaddhā asthinakharomapādapāhsuprabhriayo virodhindm māranārtham ye bhūmau nikhanyants, an interesting case of a clearly correct comment; so Bhāsk, here; cf. AV. x. 1. 18; Bloomfield, Atharvaveda, pp. 65, 68.

² raignari is explained by Sayana as being due to the fact that in the Brahmana the two jaws are the objects of comparison and compari is therefore feminine. p The two which slay the Rakṣas, which slay the spell, and which are of Viṣṇu.

q Thou art great, with a great pressing stone; call forth to Indra with a great voice.

1 Cf. KS. ii. 13; KapS. ii. 7; MS. i. 2, 12; VS. v. 81-4; PB, i. 4. 2-15. For the Brahmana see TS, vi. 3, 1, 3, The verses are addressed by the Adhvaryu as follows: a is addressed to the Agnidh's altar, b to the Hotr's, e to the Maitravaruna's, d to the Brahmanacchansin's, e to the Potr's, f to the Nestr's, g to the Achavaka's, A to the Marjallya. The remaining verses are addressed respectively to the Ahavaniya, the Astava (within the Mahavedi, to the south of the Catvala), the Catvala, the Paçuçrapana, the Audumbari, the seat of the Brahman, the Garhapatya, the Daksinagni, and the old Garhapatya (as distinct from the calamukhiya). In each case r is joined with the relevant Mantra. See BÇS, vi. 29, and cf. ApÇS, xi. 14, 2-7, 10-15; MCS. ii. 2. 4; KCS. viii. 6, 15-28; ix. 8, 18-24; ÇÇS, vi. 12, 6-28; LÇÇ. ii. 2, 12-26,

There is no plausible explanation of the mystic Tutha; Sāyaṇa on PB. gives tod as the root! It is identified with the Brahman in CB. iv. 3. 4, 15 (on VS. vii. 45), a avasyah is found in VS, and is a v. l. in MS. But KS, and KapS, have "squah.

The other Sanhitäs, except VS., agree in reading asternal.

³ The other Sanhitas agree in reading nabbo 'si pratakea.

The VS. has wreed only, a certainly inferior version, and, with KS. and MS., -sidenab.

For Aja Ekapād, see Macdonell, Ved. Myth. pp. 73, 74.

For Ahi Budhuya, see Macdonell, pp. 72, 78.

10 In some MSS, of KS, piprihi is read,

¹¹ Cf. KS. iii. 1; KapS. ii. 8; MS. i. 2. 14; VS. v. 35-40. For the Brähmana see TS. vi. 3. 2. Mantras a and b are recited by b May the active one gladly partake of the ghee.1

c May Agni here make room for us; May he go before us cleaving the foe; Joyonsly may he conquer our foes; May he win booty in the contest for booty.

d Step widely, O Visnu; Give us broad space for dwelling in;
Drink the ghee, thou whose birthplace is in the ghee;
Lengthen (the years) of the lord of the sacrifice.

e Soma goeth, who knoweth the way; He approacheth the place of the gods, To sit on the birthplace of Order.²

f Thou art the seat of Aditi.

g Do thou sit on the seat of Aditi.

h This, god Savitr, is the Soma of you (gods); guard it; let it escape you not.

the Adhvaryu to accompany the making of libations in the Çalamukhlya fire; c the advance of the priests to the Agnidh's altar, being recited by the Adhvaryu; d is recited by the Adhvaryu at the libation in the Ahavaniya fire; the sacrificer recites e as he enters the shed of the oblation-holder; f is recited by the Adhvaryu as he deposits the antelope skin in the right-hand oblation-holder, and g accompanies the deposit on it of the Soma by the Adhvaryu or the sacrifloer; A is said by the sacrificer of the Soma, and i is addressed to the Soma, k is also spoken by him, and on leaving the shed he utters I, the latter part as he looks at the Ahavaniya or Soma. The intermediate consecration (arantara-fiksa) is now over, and the Mantras m, n, and o are said by the sacrificer to terminate his temporary change of personality in the consecration. See BCS. vi. 80, 81; and cf. ApCS, xi, 16, 12-18, 9; MCS, ii, 2, 4. 22 seq.; KCS. viii. 6. 37-7. 24; Caland and Henry, L'Agnistoma, pp. 110-117.

13 This is RV, viii. 79, 3 without change, and so also in the other Sanhitäs. The sense of tankfdbhyah is uncertain: Sayana is contented to render it by 'Raksases' as they cariram kyntanti; and this may be pressed to mean 'vexing the self'. But there is more probability in the view that 'kirdbhyah is an inaccuracy for 'kytebhyah. Sayana takes uni rankham together, and he is followed by Caland and Henry. But this is really impossible: the words must be acc. governed by pantd. Eggeling (SBE, xxvi. 157) renders 'widely withhold thy protection' and gives as the possible sense of tandkydbhyah 'that assume various forms'.

aphir is uncertain, as it is glossed by Sayana as alpadeha, 'slender', but may well have the sense 'active', which is clearly that of aphir, of which aphi may be a variant by a false analogy: aphir is either from ap, 'work' (cf. RV. i. 151. 4) and \(\sqrt{tear}\), 'hasten', or ap, 'water' with ter 'vanquishing' (in speed), rather than for ap(a)s-tur (Macdonell, Ved. Gramm. p. 241, n. 9). Cf. TS, vi. 3, 2, 2.

5 KS, and MS, agree in reading deva savitar epi is and rukyawa, but at the end too dabkam, and VS, has the same version. The plural is, however, easy: the gods are meant, and the epithet deva at once suggests them. l Here (may) I (be free) from Varuna's noose; may I gaze on the heaven, on the light that is for all men.

m Agni, lord of vows, thou art the vow-lord of vows.

n May my body that hath been in thee be here in me; may thy body that hath been in me be there in thee.

o Be aright the vows, O vow-lord, of both of us votaries.3

i. 3. 5. a I have passed by some, I have not approached others.

b I have found thee nearer than the farther, farther than the near.5

c So I welcome thee, that art of Visnu, for the sacrifice to the gods.

d Let the god Savitr anoint thee with honey.

f O axe, harm it not.

g With thy top graze not the sky, with thy middle harm not the atmosphere, with earth be united.

h O tree, grow with a hundred shoots; may we grow with a thousand shoots.

i Thou, whom this sharp axe hath brought forward for great good fortune, uncut, with wealth of heroes, (give us) riches."

The other versions supply either amaket (MS.), maketya (KS.), or macya (VS.). The verb is not needed and an acrist is much more in place than an optative: MS. has abhievakyam and KS. abhievakhyam, but khyayam is at least as good sense: the other versions insert caicednarám and jyötih.

KS. has no and vratinam, but the reading nau... vratinah is clearly to be preferred.

³ Cf. KS. iii. 2; KapS. ii. 9; MS. i. 2, 14; VS. v. 42, 43. For the Brahmana see TS. vi. 3. 3. The ritual is that of the cutting of the post for the sacrifice performed by the Adhvaryu, with the aid of a carpenter, and accompanied by the sacrificer. Mantra a marks the selection of the tree, and b and c announce its finding : the three are practically one; d accompanies the ancinting of the tree, s the placing of Darbha grass, and f the cleaving, g the fall; then h is addressed to the stump, and i to the post as it is trimmed. See BCS. iv. 1; ApCS. vii. 2; MCS. i. 8, 1; KCS. vi. 1, 5-21; and other texts (Bhar., Hir.) in Schwab, Das altindische Thieropfer,

• The sense is clearly that he goes past some trees and not beyond the others, not, as Schwab, that he passes by some trees fit for offering and does not approach others unfit. Clearly he would take the first tree, and the contrary views of the commentators in the Sütras are due to invention on a misunderstanding of the text. The KS. actually adds: yan najujosam pari tan aurjam.

Schwab adopts the quite impossible rendering of the comm. by which the sense is made to be 'full of good qualities and free from defects'. Both KS. and MS. and also VS have the less rare abl. with areak and paras; Delbrück, Allind. Synt. p. 138, ignores the occurrence of areak with instr. which is found in RV. x. 129. 8 apparently in the sense of 'later' in time.

The latter part of the Mantra is said while the speaker anoints his heart. The reference is, of course, to sons.

The last three words are not in MS, and in KS, are read as achimarayam (easier) surisal. The natural subject is suidhitis but the sense is clearly that the post is to be a giver of wealth, and achimal is a usual example of the ritual device exemplified in f of trying to avoid the displeasure of the tree at the injury by denying its existence. Cf. i. 8. 9, n. 2. Weber (Ind. Stud. xiii. 95) takes rdyal; as nom., but it is difficult to lay much stress on an accent.

1 Cf. KS, iii, 3; KapS. ii. 10; MS. i. 2. 14; VS. vi. 1-6. The verses accompany the placing up of the post. The Adhvaryu says a while he sprinkles the post from the foot upwards; with b he pours the water into the hole for the post, and with c the remaining grain; d accompanies the laying down of a bunch of grass, e the throwing of the splinter into the hole; f the ancinting of the top of the post; g the placing of the top on the post; A the setting up the post; i the placing of the base (upara) in the earth; with & the side which stands near the fire is placed in a straight line with the Uttarayedi; with m the hole is filled up with earth, and beaten down with n; with o he girdles the post with a triple band of grass, and p marks the fixing of the sears in the middle band of grass on the post. See Schwab, Das altindische Thieropfer, pp. 68-74, for the Sutras, which all vary a good deal, and cf. BCS. iv. 4; vi. 8; ĀpÇS. vii. 10; MÇS. i. 8, 2; KÇS. vi. 2, 15-8, 15.

² This is RV. i. 154, 6 with variants, RV. has to vam vastūni, gamadhyai viznak and bhuri, and KS. agrees with it save in having vienoh; VS. has yd to dhdmani, and then as KS.; MS. has to to didmoni and then as KS. Mis clearly a blunder caused by the following te, and gamddhye (sic) is a mere monstrosity; cf. Weber, Ind. Stud. xiii, 102; Whitney, Sansk. Gramm. § 976; Macdonell, Ved. Gramm. p. 410. The sense of anis is uncertain; see Pischel, Ved. Stud. i. 226; iii. 208; Geldner, iii. 122 n. Many horned may refer to the number of stars (= kine), or be really 'strong horned' (so Pischel) or be = 'many, horned'.

This is RV. i. 22. 19 without variant. The use of with is very noteworthy; yat is the usual Vedic particle in the usage; Delbrück, Altind. Synt. p. 576. Eggeling, SBE. xxvi. 171, renders 'whereby he beheld the sacred ordinances', but this is perhaps less natural. For wate, perhaps courses', cf. p. 80, n. 2.

* This is RV. i. 22. 20 without variant.

1 For m and n ef. i. 3. 1, k and l.

The texts vary here: VS. has pairimain vajaminam rayo manusyanam; KS. shortens it to pairimain rayo manusyam; MS. extends it to pairimain vajamanam manusyah saha rayas passa saha prajaya os vajayanam. The version given is clearly the only sense to be got out of the text as it stands.

* Cf. KS, iii. 4; KapS, ii. 11; MS. i. 2. 7 and 15; VS. v. 2; vi. 7, 8; v. 2, 4. For the Brahmana see vi. 3. 6. 1, 2; 5, 2-4. The chapter deals with the pocupokarana. With Mantra a the Adhvaryu takes two blades of Darbha grass, one after the other, with b a Plaksa twig (according to Baudh, this is addressed to the animal), and after touching the victim with the grass and the twig he drives it on with the Mantras c-g. Mantras h-p deal with the Agnimanthana. With h he places to the east of the Ahavaniya the Adhimanthana splinter; with i he places two shoots of Darbha grass on the splinter; with k he takes in his hand the lower kindling-stick, saying 'Thou art Urvaçi', with the words 'Thou art Pururayas' the upper stick, and dips the two in butter with I; with the remainder of &, 'Thou art Ayu', he puts the pramantha in the yeni of the lower stick. With m either the Adhvaryu, or, as Baudh., the sacrificer accompanies the turning of the caltra of the upper stick; n and e accompany the flinging of the lighted wool or sawdust upon the Uttaravedi, and with p an offering is made on the place where the fire has fallen after a piece of wood or the Adhimanthana splinter has been thrown upon it. Cf. Schwab. Das altindische Thieropfer, pp. 74-80, and see BCS. iv. 5; ApCS. vii. 12 and 13; MCS. i 8.3; 7.1; KCS. vi 3.10; v. 1.23, 2.6.

i 8.3; 7.1; KÇS.vi. 3.19; v. I. 28-2.6.
The other Sanhitas have updels. The Mantra is addressed according to Baudh. to the animal itself, presumably, as suggested by Schwab, in the sense 'Thou comest willingly to the offering', another example of the widespread belief in the desirability of propitiating the spirit of the victim by assuring it of its willingness to die; cf. ÇB. iii. 7. 3. 6, and see above, i. 3. 5 c and f.

The other texts have either vaknayak (KS., MS.) or at the end raknitaman (VS.). For the traditional explanation see TS. vi. 3. 6. 1 (CB, iii. 7, 3, 7; MS, iii. 9, 5), where the desirir rican are taken as the victims; Sayana in his comm, here understands the subject to be the various limbs of the one victim, which is in point, and takes the rest as accusative. Schwab thinks that the verse is a fragment of a verse about the Maruts, the servants of the gods per excellence, and that it has won acceptance here by reason of its beginning. He points out the very Pratika-like character of the verses, and that VS. vi. 7, 8 appears to have been meant to produce an easier sense.

For this Schwab cites TS, iv. 1. 7, 3; TB, ii. 5 6, 3; 8, 2, 8.

 - b Offering to the gods, I seize thee with the noose of sacred order.
 - c Fear not men.
 - d For the waters thee, for the plants thee, I sprinkle.

read senders and KS. ascadan. Eggeling (SBE xxvi. 180) renders 'be relished by thee'.

- VS. has rama; KS. and KapS. rama, and MS. rame. Weber, IS. xiii. 68, takes rames as imperative (cf. Bhāsk. ramaya; Sāyana ramaniyani kuru) and this must be right.
- 1 Cf. TS. i. 5. 6 c.
- All the texts agree in having this order of the names, but HirCS, iv. 3. 7 shows that the difficulty of it was felt early, as it ascribes the following order: (1) adhardragi with Urracy ast; (2) attardrami with Purirard; (3) dipping in ghee with ghrtena; (4) union with Ayar asi, with the option of organism dadhaldadm.
- 4 ann is causal in the conception of the TS. vi. 3, 5, 3; cf. Delbrück, Allind. Synt. p. 455.
- b Cf. KS. iii. 5, 6; KapS. it. 11, 12; MS. i. 2. 15, 16; VS. vi. 8-13. For the Brāhmaņa see TS. vi. 3, 6, 3, 4; 7, 4, 5; 8, 2-4. With Mantra a the noose for the sacrificial animal is taken up, and tied round the right leg of the animal with b; c is addressed to it also; with d the animal is besprinkled from above, and with s allowed to drink for the last time, while accompanies the sprinkling from below; with g the victim is anointed in three
- places, very variously given, but, accordto Baudh., forehead, hump, and right croni; h is addressed to the sears and scadbiti, which are anointed with ghee; i to the capacrapanas, the two stalks of Darbha grass and the twig of Plaksa; k is said by the Aguldh as he precedes the animal to the place of sacrifice, going between the carolis and the utkara; I is addressed to one of the two upakaranabarkis; then the sacrificer's wife is brought up and addresses m to the sun; n is said by the Pratiprasthatr during the advance of the wife; o is addressed to the waters taken by the wife from the edtedla. Cf. Schwab, Das altindische Thieropfer, pp. 81, 82, 85, 96, 101, 103, 109, and see BCS. iv. 5, 6; ApCS. vii. 13, 14; MCS. i. 8. 3; KCS. vl. 3, 26-6, 1.
- * mdnagah is read in VS. and its equivalent in MS. and in KapS. KS. has mdnagah. The CB. iii. 7. 4. 2 evidently takes the passage as 'Be bold, O man', which is not very satisfactory: the Kanya has dharada mdnagah which, or the TS. reading. Eggeling (SBE. xxvi. 181, n. 1) prefers. Schwab compares dharan in RV. i. 63. 3, but that is not certain; cf. also Delbrück, Allind. Synt. p. 177.

f Ye divine waters, make it palatable, a very palatable offering for the gods.³

g Let thy breath be united with the wind, thy limbs with the sacrificial, the lord of the sacrifice with his prayer.

h Anointed with ghee, do ye guard the beast.

i Ye wealthy ones, do ye kindly resort to the lord of the sacrifice.

k O broad atmosphere, in unison with the god [1] wind, sacrifice with the life of this offering; be united with its body; extending more broadly, make the sacrifice of the lord of the sacrifice most successful.

I Guard from contact with earth.

m Homage to thee, O extended one.5

n Come forward, irresistible, along the stream of ghee, with offspring, with increase of wealth.

o O ye waters, goddesses, purifying and pure, do ye bring the gods; may we, pure and served (by you), be servers upon you.

 3. 9. a Let thy speech swell, let thy breath swell, let thine eye swell, let thine ear swell.

b The pain that hath reached thy vital airs, that (hath reached) thine eye, that (hath reached) thine ear, what is harsh in thee, what is in its place,—let that swell, let that hereby be pure.

No doubt peri is here active, but there can be little doubt that the phrase is merely a transferred usage of apdin perili which is equivalent to 'germ of the waters'.

² soderom may mean 'united with the gods' in the sense that the divine is in the offering, a very common feature of sacrifice.

* predid is read in KS., KapS., and MS., except in the MS. P of that text, which seems to have had priyamdid(h); cf. VS. priyam did d vioa.

KS. and MS. agree in reading varyiyo varyiyase, while VS. has varye. If the KS. and MS. reading is more than a mere blunder, then it is a case of a variant of the usual form uror varyiyas (cf. Kelth, JRAS. 1909, pp. 428-30), both being put in the comparative, which, however, is not very probable, and the reading of the text and as regards varyiyasi of VS. seems preferable.

MS. H in MS. and KapS. have attended by a mere blunder.

For adheam VS, has vodheam (Whitney, Sansk. Gramm. § 839); MS. yuyudheam (P. yayadheam); KS. yadheam; KapS. yaddham.

7 Cf. KS. iii, 6; KapS. ii. 13; MS. i. 2, 16;

VS. vi. 15, 16. For the Brahmana see TS. vi. 3. 9. 1-6. This section describes the cutting out of the omentum. a-s accompany the washing by the wife with the help of the Adhvaryu of the members of the victim; f is said by the Adhvaryu as he places one of the two grass blades on the beast and g as he cuts into the victim through the grass ; h-k accompany his throwing away the cut part of the grass blade which he has dipped in the blood of the cut; with I he seizes the omentum, and with m inserts below it the two-pronged (deigald) fork, the singlepronged fork being inserted above; a is said as he severs the omentum completely with the axe; he then follows the Agnidh to the Uttaravedi, carrying the omentum to the accompaniment of o, and with p flings the point of the grass blade which he has still retained in his hand into the fire; with q he hurls into the fire both the omentum-forks. Cf. Schwab, Das altindische Thieropfer, pp. 111-114, 121; and see BCS. iv. 6, 7; ApCS. vii. 19-21; MCS. i. S. 4; KCS. vi. 6, 5-27.

- c Let thy navel swell, let thine anus swell.
- d Be thy feet pure.
- e Hail to the waters [1]! Hail to the plants! Hail to earth! Hail to night and day!
 - f O plant, protect him.
 - g O axe, harm him not.
 - A Thou art the share of the Raksases.
 - i This Raksas here I lead to the lowest darkness.
- & Him who hateth us and whom we hate, here him I lead to the lowest darkness.
 - I For food thee!
 - m In ghee, O sky and earth, be covered.1
 - n Uncut, with wealth of heroes, (give us) riches.1
 - o Fare along the broad atmosphere.
 - p O Vayu, taste the drops.
 - q Hail! go to Urdhvanabhas, offspring of the Maruts.
- i. 3. 10. a Let b thy mind with the mind, let thy breath with the breath (of the gods be united).
 - b Be this offering rich in ghee pleasing to the gods; hail!
 - c May Indra's expiration be set* in every limb; May Indra's inspiration be in every limb.
 - d O god Tvastr, let mind be united for thee, When ye that are various become of one form;⁷
- ¹ The verb is presumably middle as indicated by the voc.: Eggeling, SBE. xxvi. 194, makes it active (the forks being the subject) in VS. against the accent.
- ² Cf. i. 3, 5 i, where the same phrase causes trouble. Schwab takes it as 'undiminished in riches', but this use of the genitive (?) is quite improbable in this passage.
- The Pada takes vibi as two words, very absurdly. So again in i. 8. 1. 1, and so also the Brahmans, TS. vi. 8. 9. 5; Weber, Ind. Stud. xiii. 69.
- The lightning which is above the clouds, or perhaps Vayu; cf. Egyeling, SBE. xxvi. 198, n. 4. srdåd, as vi. 3. 9. 6 shows and as the Sütras confirm, belongs to the next Mantra and not (as in Weber's text) to this
- Ol. KS. iii. 7; KapS. ii. 14; MS. i. 2. 17; VS. vi. 18-20. For the Brähmana see TS. vi. 3. 11. Mantras a and b are uttered as the heart is sprinkled with speckled ghee; c and d are said when all the

- cooked and uncooked parts of the beast are assembled together; e-h accompany the pouring off of the fat (casd) and the mixing it with butter, &c.; i-o are said by the Pratiprasthat; to accompany the offering of the fat, partly in the fire, partly in the various quarters. Cf. Schwab, Das altindische Thieropfer, pp. 185, 141, 142, 145, and see BCS. iv. 8, 9; ApCS. vii. 23-25; MCS. i. 8, 5; KCS. vi. 8, 6-9, 1.
- The other Sanhitas have didayat: didayat is apparently an intensive from dai, but the form and voice are most irregular: bobhwat is apparently a blunder for bobhataf, the subjunctive of the intensive of bha (Whitney, Sansk, Gramm. § 1008). The other texts repeat the didayat, but VS. has aidhitah. Cf. Eggeling, SBE, xxvi. 210, n. l.
- ams. (M 1) of the MS. v. Schroeder, followed by Schwab, reads sat: The other Sanhitas have salatama (salatama VS.)

Over thee as thou goest among the gods for help let thy comrades And thy father and mother rejoice.

g The waters are come together.

- h For the whirl' of the wind [1] thee, for the rush of Paşan, for the growth of the waters, of the plants.
 - i Drink ghee, ye drinkers of ghee; drink fat, ye drinkers of fat.

k Thou art the oblation of the atmosphere.

I Hail! thee to the atmosphere!

m The quarters, the Pradices, the Adices, the Vidices, the Uddices.

" Hail to the quarters!

o Homage to the quarters.

- i. 3. 11. a Go¹ to the ocean, hail! Go to the atmosphere, hail! Go to god Savity, hail! Go to day and night, hail! Go to Mitra and Varuna, hail! Go to Soma, hail! Go to the sacrifice, hail! Go to the metres, hail! Go to the sky and the earth, hail! Go to the clouds of the sky, hail! Go to Agni Vaiçvānara, hail!
 - b To the waters thee! To the plants thee!

c Give me mind and heart ! "

d May I acquire body, skin, son, and grandson.

e Thou art pain; pain him who hateth us and whom we hate.

pid ripuripum bubbleu (bhirain VS.). The phrase is beyond doubt an adaptation of the phrase in RV. x. 10. 2, where it is used of Yami. VS. follows RV. precisely save for ripuripum. subbbye is in all the Sanhithe save MS.: all have med piláre as two words, which is irregular but natural; see Wackernegel, Allind, Grassm. zz. i. 156, and cf. 1. 7. 8, n. 8, Eggeling (SRE, xxvi. 210, n. 2) suggests 'the mothers and fathers', but see TS. vi. 3, 11. 3.

The other Sanhitas have thriften. TS. alone has not the spasse residing in which is clearly the reading of KS., KapS., MS., and in VS. has become reatherst; see Panini, iii. 4. 10; cf. for rohippai, Whitney, § 977; Macdonell, Fmi. Gramm. p. 410, n. 1.

These names presumably denote the quarters, the various intermediate quarters, and the zenith and nadir: the terms, however, cannot be pressed.

Of. KS, 111, 8; KapS, 11, 18; MS, 1, 2, 18;

VS. vi. 21, 22. For the Brahmana see vi. 4. I. This section deals with an Anuyaja, that of the guds or intestines, which is made by the Adhvaryu (according to Schwab by the Pratiprasthätr, but see BCS. iv. 10, which differs from the Prayoga cited in Schwab and from the other texts). With b he washes the remnants from his hands, and c also accompanies this rite according to Raudh. ; d is said as he gazes on the smoke of the fire ; a and fapply to a different rite; the burying of the heart-spit at the end of the offering is accompanied by e and pouring water over it by f. Cf. Schwab, Das altindische Thieropfer, pp. 150-5, 161, 162, and see BCS, iv. 10; ApCS, vii. 26, 27; MCS. i. S. 6; KCS. vl. 9, 10-10, 5; Eggeling, SBE xxvi, 212, n. 1.

Schwab, p. 155, n., suggests with Ludwig on RV. ii. 29. 6 that admit is loc., but this is quite improbable: Admits is found in MS. and supported by MCS. i. 5, 6.

sonutroness is conjectured by Schwab who f From every rule of thine, O King Varuṇa, set us free;

From whatever oath by the waters, by the kine, by Varuṇa, we have sworn,

From that, O Varuna, set us free.

i. 3. 12. a These waters are rich in oblation,

Rich in oblation is the divine sacrifice,

Rich in oblation he seeks to win (the gods?).

Rich in oblation be the sun.

b In the seat of Agni whose home is abiding I set you down, kindly for kindness, accord to me kindness.

c Ye are the share of Indra and Agni; ye are the share of Mitra and Varuna; ye are the share of the all-gods.

d Be watchful over the sacrifice.

i. 3. 13. a To the heart thee! To mind thee! To the sky thee! To the sun thee!

b Raise aloft the sacrifice; in the sky guide to the gods the prayers.

c O King Soma, come hither, descend.

d Fear not, tremble not.

c Let me not harm thee.

f Do thou descend to creatures; let creatures descend to thee.

g Let Agni (kindled) with the kindling-stick hear my appeal, Let the waters hear, and the divine Dhisanas; takes tand as adjectival, but surely it must be nominal. Sayana has uttamaistianatiam.

Addmno is conjectured by the Pet. Lex. to be a mistake for ddmno, while Eggeling (SBE, xxvi. 216, n. 1) suggests that it may be construed with rajan, with which the accent would of course quite agree. But if dddmnn be taken in the sense of 'rule', 'order', it can stand.

The version here is that of Schwab, except that he takes dghnight with dpan which is against the accent. That this is the sense can hardly be doubted nor that VS. in its pid their aghand, which is practically nonsense (see Eggeling, p. 216, n. 2), is merely presenting a corruption of the original text. Sayana's rendering is useless; he thinks it is a serious matter to mention a great name and to aak for favours, and Varuna is to undo the twin evils seen in this passage.

² Cf. KS. iii. 9; KapS. ii. 16; MS. i. 3. 1; VS. vi. 23, 24. For the Brahmana see TS. vi. 4. 2. 4-6. This section deals with the Vasativari waters, for which the Adhvaryu goes in search to a stream and with which he returns; a is said when he draws the water, b as he places it on the old Yedl; c as it is deposited on the right hip of the Uttaravedi, s on the left hip, e as it is finally laid down on the Agnidh's altar, and f when the water has been laid down. Cf. Caland and Henry, L'Agnisiona, pp. 119, 120 (which ignorea c and s); BCS. vi. 32; ApCS. xi. 20. 5-13; MCS. ii. 2. 5. 13-17; KCS. viii. 9. 7-23.

Cf. KS. iii. 9; KapS. ii. 16; MS. i. 8. 1; VS. vi. 25-29. For the Brahmana see TS. vi. 4. 8. This section deals in the main with the descent of Soma from this cart, viz. a-f: g is used to accompany a libation of butter at the end of the morning litany; h and i a libation on the waters, h the filling of the pot with waters; i finally the pouring of butter into the Ahavaniya; see BCS. vii. 1, 2, 3, and KCS. ix. 1. 5-3. 16, and cf. Caland and Henry, U Againgtonia, pp. 128, 129, 138, 141, 146.

Hearken, ye pressing stones, to the sacrifice of me the wise one, Let the god Savitr hearken to my appeal.

h Ye divine waters, child of the waters, that wave, Which is rich in oblation, powerful and sweetest, Give to the gods among the gods,

- i. 3. 14. a Thou, O Agni, art Rudra, the Asura of the mighty sky, Thou art the host of the Maruts, thou art lord of food; Thou farest with ruddy winds, blessing the household; Thou, as Pusan dost, protectest thy worshippers with thyself.

b Rudra, king of the sacrifice, True offerer, priest of both worlds, Agni before the dreadful thunder,* Of golden colour, win ye for help.

- c Agni hath set him down as priest, good sacrificer, On the lap of his mother, in the fragrant place, The youthful, the wise, pre-eminent among men [1], righteous, Supporter of the folk in whose midst he is kindled.
- d Good hath he made our sacrifice this day;
 The hidden tongue of the sacrifice have we found;
 He hath come, fragrant, clothed in life;
 He hath made our sacrifice this day to prosper.
- Agni hath cried like Dyaus thundering, Licking the earth, devouring the plants; Straightway on birth he shone aflame;

² RV., KS., KapS., MS., and VS. all have dody which agrees a little better with junda. If the reading of RV. is correct yantd is very nearly an example of a clear future sense of the use of verbals in tr: Whitney, Sanak. Gramm. § 947, and Macdonell, Vol. Gramm. § 540, go perhaps too far in denying it for the early texts in Mantra.

For these Yajyas preceded by Puronuväkyäs for a series of Kämyestla, see TS. ii. 2, 2, 3-4, 8. The verses are nearly all Revedic: s = ii. 1, 6; b = iv. 3, 1; c = v, 1, 6; d = x. 53. 3; e = x. 45. 4; f = vi. 5. 2; g = viii. 43. 18; h = vi. 5. 7; i = ii. 7. 1; k = iv. 6. 2; o = x. 45. 1; p = ii. 7. 4; q = x. 45. 8; r = i. 71. 8; s = iii. 19. 3; t = v. 23. 1; u = v. 23. 2; v = viii. 43. 11; u = vi. 4. 4; u = vi. 66. 19; u = vii. 43. 11; u = vi. 4. 4; u = viii. 44. 17; u = v

* actiful possibly is proleptic, as Griffith takes it, 'before the thunder which leaves man senseless'. Apparently the poet conceives the thunder as succeeding the lightning, which is quite a possible view of the relations to a primitive intelligence. He blazeth with his light within the firmaments.

f In thee, O many-faced sacrificer [2],

Morning and evening, the sacrificers place their treasures,

In whom, purifying, good things are placed, even as the heaven and earth (support) all beings.

q To thee, best of Angirases,

All folk with fair dwellings severally,1

O Agni, have turned to gain their wish.

May we win by thy help, O Agni, our wish, Wealth with fair offspring, O wealthy one; May we win booty, seeking for booty; May we win, O deathless, undying glory.

i O Agni, of the Bharatas, youngest, Bear to us excellent, glorious wealth, [3] O bright one, wealth which many desire.

k White robed is he, thundering, standing in the firmament, Youngest, with loud-sounding immortal ones, Who, purifying, most manifold, Agni, marcheth devouring many broad (forests).

l May he give thee life on every side, Agni here, the desirable; Let thy breath come back to thee; I drive away the disease from thee.³

M Giving life, O Agni, rejoicing in the oblation, Be thou faced with ghee, and with birthplace of ghee; Having drunk the ghee, the sweet, the delightful product of the cow. As a father his son [4], do thou protect him.

n To thee, the eager one, O knower of all, O active one, Agni, I offer this fair praise.

o From the sky was Agni first born, From us secondly he who knoweth all, In the waters thirdly the manly; The pious man singeth of him, the undying, as he kindleth him.

Pure, O purifying one, to be lauded, O Agni, mightily thou shinest, To whom offering is made with ghee.

* prihak seems to have this sense here.

This verse occurs in a different shape in AV. vii. 58. 6, and with a yatu (a clear case of a substitution of the easier lection) in ACS, ii. 10. 4. But though found in the TA, and the ritual texts, it is not in KS., MS., or VS.

But for tumos, which is represented by usmai, this is RV. viii. 48, 2; KS. x. 12.

- q Shining like gold, he hath become widely resplendent, For glory shining with immortal life; Agni became immortal in his strength [5], What time prolific Dyaus begat him.
- What time his glory urged the lord to strength, Then (did) Dyaus (let) the pure seed be sprinkled openly; Agni begot the host, the blameless, the youthful, The worshipping, and gave it impulse.
- s He (flourishes) with keener mind, aided by thee.
 O giver, give (us wealth) in good offspring;
 O Agni, may we enjoy wealth richest in heroes; (Wealth) that is excellent, uttering praises to thee.
- t O Agni, bring us strong wealth,
 By the force of thy glory,
 That is above [6] all men
 And openly prevaileth in contests for booty.
-  O Agni, mighty one, bring to us That wealth which prevaileth in contests; For thou art true, wondrous, The giver of booty of kine.
- v To Agni let us make service with hymns, Who feedeth on bull and cow, The disposer, backed with Soma.
- W For thou art, O son, a singer, seated at the feast;
 Agni made at birth a path and food;
 Do thou, O giver of strength, bestow strength upon us;
 Be victorious like a king; thou rulest within without a foe.
- x O Agni, thou purifiest life [7];
 Do thou give food and strength to us;
 Far away drive ill-fortune.
- y O Agni, good worker, purify for us Glory in good heroes; Giving increase and wealth to me,
- Ø O Agni, the purifying, with thy light, O god, with thy pleasant tongue, Bring hither the gods and sacrifice.
- aa Do thou, O shining and purifying one,
- I follow Oldenberg, op. cit. i. 75, except that I do not see any reason to take isé as other than 'for strength', instead of seeing in it an infinitive from it, 'send forth'. The vague it suits the vague ist. Oldenberg suggests connecting dyssis with the gen., not abl., and this is possible, but not absolutely essential.

² Again I follow Oldenberg, i. 282; cikpo is probably best, and reseab belongs rather to reyes than to & (agnet). O Agni, bring hither the gods To our sacrifice and our oblation.

bb Agni, of purest vows, Pure sage, pure poet, Shineth in purity, when offering is made.

or O Agni, thy pure, Bright, flaming (rays) arise, Thy lights, thy flames.

The Soma Cups

i. 4. 1. a I1 take thee. Thou art the stone which maketh the sacrifice for the gods; make this sacrifice deep, with thy highest edge, (make) the Soma well pressed for Indra, rich in sweetness, in milk, bringing rain.

b To Indra, slayer of Vrtra, thee! To Indra, conqueror of Vrtra, thee! To Indra, slayer of foes, thee! To Indra with the Adityas, thee! To c Ye are savoury, conquerors of Vrtra, delightful through your gifts,2 spouses of immortality,

Do ye, O goddesses, place this sacrifice among the gods;

Do ye, invoked, drink the Soma;

Invoked by you [1] let Soma drink.

d With thy light which is in the sky, on the earth, in the broad atmosphere, do thou for this sacrificer spread wealth " broadly; be favourable to the giver.

e Ye Dhisanas, that are strong, be strengthened; gather strength, and give me strength; let me not harm you, harm me not.

f Forward, backward, upward, downward, let these quarters speed to you; O mother, come forth.

Cf. KS. iii. 10; KapS. ii. 17; MS. i. 3.2-4; VS. vi. 30-36; vii. 2. For the Brahmana see TS. vi. 4, 4, 1. The first verse accompanies the taking up of the stone called updisqusatures; b accompanies the measuring of the Soma for the first libation into five parts, each with a separate dedication; c accompanies the sprinkling of water on the Soma; a the mixing of Soma with water; with a the planks are touched; f is the nigrabha; the Unnet; brings water and pours it into the Hotr's bowl, into which each of the pressers of the Soma pour some filaments of Soma with f; g is said by the Pratiprasthatr when he puts back the six Soma shoots he has taken out earlier and kept (i. 4. 2). Cf. Caland and Henry, L'Agnissome, pp. 150-2, 158, 157, and see BCS, vii. 5, 6; ApCS, xii. 9, 10; MCS. ii. 3, 3; KCS. ix. 4, 5-28.

MS. has radhoun gurtah marked in P as one word. No doubt it is a mere corruption.

MS. has rays and von Schroeder has corrected the rays of Ch. to rays in KS., but rayd in possible and, as less easy, is to be preferred in KS, as here.

· For the identification of the Dhisanas and the adhisavanaphalaka, cf. Vedic Index, 1. 20, 400 : ii. 476.

This is curious, as Soma is not very naturally

- g Thy unerring, watchful name, O Soma, to that of thee, O Soma, to Soms, hail!
- a Be 1 pure for the lord of speech, O strong one; male, purified by the i, 4, 2, arms with the shoots of the male; thou art the god purifier of gods; to those thee whose portion thou art!
 - b Thou art he who is appropriated; make our food full of sweetness for us; to all the powers of sky and earth thee!
 - c May mind enter thee.
 - d Fare along the broad atmosphere.
 - e Hail! Thee, of kindly nature, to the sun!
 - f To the gods that drink the rays thee!
 - g This is thy birthplace; to expiration thee!
- a Thou art taken with a support.
 - b O bounteous one, restrain (it), protect Soma, guard wealth, win food addressed as 'mother', even though, as Sayana says, 'mother' is a term of endearment not restricted to actual relationship. For no mara VS, has nispara; MS. nissara (or mamara); KS, and KapS, m mara; MS. adds samarir vidden, KS. sam arir vidah; VS, sim orir vidam; the sense of this is very doubtful; see Eggeling, SBE, xxvi. 245, n. 1; Ludwig, RV, rv.

Cf. KS. iv. 1; KapS. iii. 1; MS. i. 3. 4; VS. vii. 1-3. For the Brahmana see TS. vi. 4, 5, 3-5. This chapter gives the verses for the Upaneugraha, the first libation. With a the Soma is poured into a bowl by the Adhvaryu through Soma stalks held above it by the Pratiprasthatr; there are three pourings through two stalks and the three parts of the Yajus accompany them; with b he takes the cup, then looks at it, then takes it with his left hand and rubs it; the c accompanies the wpasthana; d the going of the Adhvaryu to the Ahavaniya, and e the offering of the contents of the cup in the fire; with f, after rubbing the cup, he rubs the sugar adhering to the middle enclosing-stick; with g he pours the remnants into the Agrayanasthall, and then puts a shoot into the now empty enp. See BOS. vii. 5, and cf. ApCS. xii. 10, 5-12. 11; MCS. ii. 3. 3. 12-24; KCS, ix. 4. 23-38; Caland and Henry, L'Agnissame, pp. 154-156.

In the MS, there is a v.l. risno, which is of course impossible. The Soma shoots purify the Soma.

2 KS, has manikytab, but VS, and KapS, as well as MS, have the same form as TS, The form sema is paralleled (see Wackernagel, Altind. Gramms. II. i. 203), but mam's is very curious.

fedatu in certain; in KS, the MS, T4 has the same reading as against the traste of Ch., and MS. and VS. agree, though some MSS, of MS, and KapS, have trastra.

subhavely is in VS., and MS. subhave, and in

KS. and KapS. mbho.

Cf. KS. iv. 1; KapS. iii. 1; MS. i. 3. 5; VS. vil. 4-6. For the Brahmana see TS, vi. 4, 6. This chapter gives the ritual for the Antaryama cup, offered after sunrise: the procedure is the repetition of that in the case of the Upançu cup : the Adhvaryu catches in the Antaryama cup the stream of Soma which the sacrificer pours from the Hotr's bowl through the filter held by the Udgatr over the wooden tub (dronakalaça). This he does while repeating a and b, and the rest is as in i. 4, 2; with h he lays down the cup on the Khara, next to and to the north of the Upançu pressing-stones. See BÇS. vii. 6, and cf. ApCS, xii. 18, 1-18; MCS, ii. 8, 4, 21-82; KÇS, ix. 6, 1-4; Caland and Henry, L'Agnistoma, pp. 161, 162.

The spayami is the cup used to eateh the libation which is to be drawn off; see by sacrifice, I place within thee sky and earth, within thee the broad atmosphere; in unison with the gods, the lower and the higher, O bounteous one, do thou rejoice in the Antaryama (cup).

seems, of 'by sacrifice win food', and the seems, of 'by sacrifice win food', and the seems cannot explain the sec., as it clearly merely adds to the verb the sense of 'in conjunction with the sacrificer'. For similar cases of the acc., cf. Deibrück, Altind. Spot. pp. 175-178, and cf. Keith's note on AĀ. i. 5. 1. The simple 'bënis' of Caland and Henry is hardly possible.

Mahidhara on YS, and Bhaak, and Sayana here agree in thinking that a is equivalent to 'through thee' and not dat, 'for thee', the sense being that through Indra sky and earth are placed between Soma and the fee, and this is apparently the sense according to TS, vi. 4, 6, ³ modaņama is apparently intrans., not trans., as Sāyaņa takes it; cf. Delbrück, Allind. Synt. p. 224.

Cf. KS. iv. 2; KapS. iii. 2; MS. i. 3, 6; VS. vii. 7, 8. For the Brahmana see TS, vi. 4, 7, 3. This gives the verses for the cup for Indra and Vayu. With a the Adhvaryu holds it below the filter; with a withdraws it when half full, replaces it with c, makes it brim over with d, and deposits it with the end of d. See BQS. vii. 6; ApQS. xii. 14, S, 9; MQS. ii. 3, 5, 4; KQS. ix. 6, 5, 6.

This is RV. vii. 92, 1; KS. has the variant yatab. It is found also in iii. 4, 2 s.

This is RV. i. 2. 4: propoblik is probably instrument, 'for the sake of the libutions'; it might be taken as 'gladly'.

VS. vii. 9. For the Brahmana see TS. vi. 4. 8. The verses accompany the drawing of the cup for Mitra and Varuna, and its deposit with the second half of b on its place. Cf. BCS. vii. 6; ApCS. xii. 14. 12; MCS. il. 8. 5. 6; KCS. ix. 6, 7.

- 1 This is RV. 1, 22, 3,

The sweet (f.) are apparently the Kaças, one to each Açvin.

This is a variant of RV. i. 22. I, where, however, the first Pada reads probaryojd vi bodhoya, and the second Agrissa with gachaiam. The alteration is pretty clearly deliberate: the RV. form appears in TB, ii. 4. 3. 13 with Agrissa and gachaiam, where the comm. points out that it is the Puronuväkyä of the Ägvina cup, in Nirukta, xii. 4, and in ÄGS, v. 12. 12.

Cf. KS, iv. 3; KapS. iii. 3; MS. i. 3. 10; VS. vii. 16. For the Brahmana cf. TS. vi. 4. 10. This and i. 4. 9 are the verses for the Çukra and Manthin cups; see BÇS. vii. 6; ApÇS. xii. 14. 13; MÇS. ii. 3. 5. 7; KÇS. ix. 6. 11, 12; Caland and Henry, p. 164.

This is RV. x. 123. I without variant; KS. has riminal, which is absurd. Vena is a figure of great obscurity; cf. Wallin, Cosmology of the Rigreda, pp. 34 seq.; Hillebrandt, Ved. Myth. i. 440 seq.; Bergaigne, Rel. Ved. ii. 35 seq.; Deussen, Gesch. d. Phil. i. 252; Charpentier, VOJ. xxv. 299—306, who sees in tens the sun, in some cases in the plural the Maruts or the earthly singers, the root idea being bird. This view is very improbable.

Hillebrandt (i. 222 seq.) seeks to show that the cups for Cukra and Manthin are offerings for sun and moon interpolated in the ritual, and in the name Marka (= Av. mahrka) he sees clear proof of foreign influence. But there is really no adequate evidence for the theory, which must remain a speculation. For Tilak's absurd theory that Cukra and Manthin denote planets, see Vedic Index, ii. 187. It is noteworthythat KS, adds to the unknown Canda Indra, and both KS. and MS. end with 'to manhood thee!'

⁵ Cf. KS. iv. 3; KapS. iii. 3; MS. i. 3. 11; VS. vii. 12. The verses are those of the Manthin cup; see BÇS. vii. 6; ApÇS. xii. 14. 15; MÇS. ii. 3. 5. 8; KÇS. ix. 6. 13, 14. The favouring, the strong, thou milkest with thy speech,

1 This is exactly RV, v. 44, 1; KS, gives the useless variant ya som after gird; MS. the equally useless jyethardjam. The sense is very doubtful : if dohase is read (and not donise) it is a transfer from the root class; cf. Macdonell, Ved. Gramm. p. 321, and Oldenberg's view (Egreda-Notes, i. 340) is plausible that Agni is the subject of dehase and Indra the object, reading perhaps visanam for vysinam. Griffith follows Ludwig in taking dohnse and cardhase as third persons, but this is too much a strain on grammar. Roth (ZDMG, xxxvil. 109 ssq.) argued that the whole hymn was unintelligible, and Pischel and Geldner (Ved. Stud. 1. xii, xiii) though disagreeing with him in principle do not offer any explanation. justkatatim is an abstract for concrete, and is quite intelligible in this usage.

KS. and MS. substitute 'for offering thee!'
KS. adds Surya to Marka, a clear case of substitution.

* Cf. KS. iv. 5; KapS. iii. 4; MS. i. 3. 13; VS. vii. 19, 20. For the Brahmana see TS. vi. 4. 11. This deals with the Agrayana cup, which is the Agrayanasthali into which the residues of the Upamçu and the Antaryama cups have been poured.

They are emptied into another and then poured back again into their original receptacle through the filters. All of a and the first sentence of b is uttered in a low voice, the rest aloud, and the cup is replaced with the last two sentences. Cf. BCS. vii. 6, 7; ApCS. xii. 15, 3-9; MCS. ii. 3, 5, 9; KCS. ix. 6, 15; Caland and Henry, pp. 164, 165.

This is RV. i. 189. 10, which, however, has devise twice and quasknite; VS. agrees with RV.; KS. has devd, appropriate and devise; MS. bas devd, but appropriate and decdso.

KS, and MS. have agrayanah, which is the form to be expected; but some MSS, of MS, and KapS, as well as VS, agree with TS.

 This is a variant for the Agrayana in the case of one who has foes (birasyestal) or is practising witcheraft (abhicarate vd) according to ApCS, xii. 15, 5,

The verse is unique: the number 33 is evidently as before, but the construction is bad, for the number seems to apply to earth and sky, whereas only 22 are there. Myth. p. 19. pressings; let Visnu guard thee, do thou guard the folk with thy power; this is thy birthplace; to the all-gods thee!

This is RV. vi. 7. 1 with the change of rtdya for rtd d. KS., MS., and VS. agree with RV. in this, and KS, alone has a variant, janayanta for janayanta.

Of. KS, iv. 7; KapS. iii, 5; MS. i. 3, 16; VS. vii. 30. For the Brahmana see TS. vi. 5. 3. 4. These Mantras are used for the taking of the Rtugrahas, twelve to fourteen in number. Each part of the Mantra is said by the Adhvaryu and the Pratiprasthatr respectively, who are not to draw at the same time, but one after the other, and the Pratiprasthatr is required to show respect to the Adhvaryu both as he enters and as he leaves the place of the oblation-holder. See BCS, vii. 16; ApCS, xii. 26, 8-27, 8; MCS, ii. 4, 2. 2, 3; KCS, ix. 13, 1-18; Eggeling, SBE. xxvi. 318 seq. ; Caland and Henry, pp. 224-229, who ignore this section apparently by oversight.

In the other Sanhitâs the dative is used throughout (see ApÇS. xii. 16. 12, who gives this as the view of some). The forms there used show that Nabhas, Sahas, and Tapas are meant, but this is not necessarily the case here.

The Mantras are used in the drawing of the cup by the Pratipraethatr or the Adhvaryu for Agni with the wives of the gods, b being used with the first Vasat at the pouring into the Ahavaniya of a part of the libation ; see BCS, viii, 14: ApCS, xiii, 14, 7-10: MS, ii. 5, 1, 10-14; KCS, x. 6, 16-19; Caland and Henry, pp. 366, 367.

² The readings differ slightly : the omission of te is peculiar to KS., while VS, has deva some and fedor, and KapS, no vocative : there is a variant in MS. of Indra. pointrating grahan is read by VS., which the St. Petersburg Dict. takes as one phrase : this is supported by the reading here and in MS., whereas KS. has paintental graham. and so far supports the taking of the patricatals of VS. as a gen., adopted by Eggeling, SBE. xxvi. 366 n., and by Caland and Henry, TS. is isolated in having grandmi: KS, and VS, have rdhudsam, and MS. radbydsom. The Sandhi indo is very noteworthy : in MS, and KS. incla is read.

The addition of deveno is not in KS. or MS. but in VS. pateled; h is not in the others, which give patatedyn (KS. and MS. and KapS.) or privious VS. For the accent Verbally the versions of these formulae all differ considerably, but not importantly, TS. is peculiar in having rajrasya-pretd. The acc. in horizontem supports the acc. in patrinantam in i. 4. 27 a,

" Harl stim is of course not to be translated, and Caland and Henry abandon it. Neither KS., MS., or VS. has any real parallel, but KS, has horsel othe. The reading should presumably be hart stho.

Cf. KS. iv. 11; KapS. iii, 9; MS. i. 8, 31; VS, xix, 38; xxxv, 16. KS. iv. 11; KapS. iii. 9; MS. i. 3, 32 have a quite different formula (RV, viii. 26, 5), but VS. viii. 39 agrees.

³ KS. iv. 11; KapS. iii. 9; MS. i. 3, 33; VS. viii. 40 all have instead of the verse RV. i. 50. 3, which has the verb thraj in it and so is more appropriate.

This has no parallel here in KS., MS., or VS. But 32 and 33 and 34 are used in TA. iii. 17-19 in connexion with the funeral service, and 32 is prescribed in ApÇS. xiv. 29. 1 as the Soma rite for a special case. The Kandanukrama (Ind.

Stad. iii. 375, 381) ascribes 33-34 to the fire ritual after iv. 2, 7; 3, 11; 4, 9 respectively, and this agrees with Ap. as regards 34. Bhāsk, does not explain 32-37.

This is BV. i. 91, 17. It occurs also in KS, xxxv, 13; VS. xii, 115.

This is RV. i. 113. 11, and affords one of Tilak's theoretical proofs of the Arctic origin of Vedic mythology in The Arctic Home of the Vedics.

This section is found in MS. ii. 13. 19; KS, xl. 4, and its use is prescribed in one place in ApCS, xvii. 6. 4; MCS, vi. 2. 3. They are described in the comm. on TA. iii. 19 as people date vinipuklani. For malmalal-bharonnim cf. Wackernagel, Allind, Gramm, II. i. 198.

- This section occurs in VS. xxxix. 11, 12, where it is said to be a part of the explatory verses of the Pravargya rite. It is really a part of the Açvamedha and appropriately is found in KS. Açvamedha, v. 6; cf. TB. iii. 9. 11. 2 and TĀ. iii. 20, where the comm. ascribes it to the Brahmamedha, which is a form of the Pitrmedha appropriate for a knower of Brahman. The Kandāmukrama (Ind. Stud. iii. 375, 384) puts these after v. 7. 24. In BÇS. xv. 35 there are represented fourteen Anuvākas from v. 7. 11, with 35 as the fifteenth, as in TB.
- For the strange form tapyahi see Whitney, Sanak. Gramm. § 1161 d.
- ³ VS. xxxix. 8 is partly parallel; TA. iii. 21 agrees. Cf. KCS. xx. 8. 5. The section clearly belongs with v. 7. 11-23, in place of 24: see v. 7. 24, note.

- 1 Liver' is hardly the sense in view of puknai above.
- ⁵ chiginikoçübhyüm is read in TA. VS. has rusighahinuh çinginikoçubhyüm, an obvious corruption. The chigis and nikoçuda are presumably parts of the entrails.

1 This is RV. i. 24, 8.

This is RV. i. 24. 9 with duri for dripal; MS, and KS, have dri bidhasea.

The word dalkum seems nom. rather than 'I' as Griffith takes it; apdm napdt seems necessary rather than the voc., in apposition; asuryam may of course mean in a favourable sense 'guarding the heavenly power', but the other sense 'guard against hostile forces' is possible. The other Sanhitas all have accaranyat, MS. has pratiriked asuryan; KapS., KS., and VS. have the nom. with rakean.

* KS. has for havirbhik the senseless saka; MS. has saktakts, only spoiling the metre; so has VS., but it adds sat, quite absurdly.

The KS. and MS. have nicuakuna, VS. nicumpuna, which is also in KapS., all variants of one word. KS. and MS. add no after the word doo, and MS. inserts a mysterious grhavi grho; they both have yaksi, while VS, has audisiam. The sense is not clear: I take desair desakriam as an emphatic 'god wrought', i. e. the sins of the gods; Griffith takes it as 'by aid of the gods' and the 'sin done to the gods', and similarly with martyaih.

KS. has abharpam and brata; MS. has not the verse; VS. leaves out Pada c and reads bibbria.

I adhismahi is taken by Schwab as from indh: if so it is an opt. of the acrist with a: but it seems more naturally to be taken from adh, 'prosper', and if from indh the text is wrongly accented, not only here but also in all the many texts where the pun occurs: see AV. vil. 89. 4, where curiously neither Whitney nor Lanman quotes this passage.

- I I have penetrated to the waters;
 We are united with the sap;
 I have come rich in milk, O Agni;
 Do thou unite me with radiance.
- i. 4. 46. a I ² who deeming thee immortal, Mortal myself, call on thee with prayerful heart. Upon us, O wise one, bestow glory; O Agni, through offspring may I attain immortality.

 - c To thee, O son of strength, they turn Who have desires to be fulfilled; None excelleth thee, O Indra.
 - d At each hymn the Soma delighteth Indra, The pressed (juices), the bountiful one [1], What time in unison with equal effort They call him to aid, like sons a father.
 - e O Agni, O wise one, with sap, With brilliance thou shinest, Slayer of Rakşases, suppressor of demons,³

 O Agni, rich in radiance;

 - h Thou, O Agni, riches-lord of riches, I hail [2], O lord in the sacrifices; Through thee in strife may we be victorious; May we overcome the hostilities of mortal men.

This is a variant of RV. i. 23. 23, which, however, has dpo adydms agasmahi and d gahi; KS. (which is not noted in Whitney and Lamman's notes on AV. vii. 89. 1) has agasmahi and both it and MS. have adysi.

² This section contains the usual series of Yājyās and Puronuvākyās for Kāmyestis. The verses are nearly all from RV.; a and b = v. 4. 10, 11; c = viii. 81. 14; $d = \text{vii. } 27. \ 2$; $g = \text{viii. } 44. \ 24$; h = v. 4. 1; $i = \text{v. } 18. \ 5$; $l = \text{i. } 12. \ 6$; $m = \text{viii. } 43. \ 14$; $n = \text{viii. } 44. \ 17$; $o = \text{v. } 2. \ 9$. For the Brahmana see TS, ii. 2. 4, 4-8.

Of the verses, Padas a and b are unique; c is RV, x, 97, 6 d.

PRAPATHAKA V

The Rekindling of the Fire

i. 5. 1. The 'gods and the Asuras were in conflict; the gods, in anticipation of the contest, deposited in Agni their desirable riches (thinking), 'This will still be ours, if they defeat us.' Agni desired it and went away with it. The gods having defeated (the Asuras) pursued (Agni) desirous of recovering it. They sought violently to take it from him. He wept; in that he wept (\(\frac{arodit}{arodit}\)), that is why Rudra has his name. The tear that [1] was shed became silver; therefore silver is not a suitable gift, for it is born of tears. He who gives on the strew, in his house before the year is out they weep; therefore one should not give on the strew. Agni said, 'Let me have a share; then this will be yours.' They replied, 'The re-establishing shall be thine alone.' 'He shall prosper', he said, 'who shall establish the fire with me as its divinity.' Pūṣan established it; therefore [2] did Pūṣan prosper; therefore cattle are said to be Tvaṣṭṛ established it; therefore did Tvaṣṭṛ prosper; therefore cattle are said to be Tvaṣṭṛ said to be Manu's.'

The agray of some MSS., which Weber takes as agray, is merely a misread agray, an pointed out by Luders, Die Vydan Cohand, p. 36, n. 2.

Dhatr established it; therefore Dhatr prospered; Dhatr is the year; therefore offspring and cattle are born in the course of the year. He who knows thus the prosperity of the re-establishing [3] prospers. He who knows his connexions becomes possessed of connexions himself. Agni desiring a share after being established assailed the offspring and cattle of the sacrifice. Having removed it, one should re-establish it; thus he unites him with his own portion; verily he is appeased. He should establish under Punarvasū; Punarvasū is the Nakṣatra for the re-establishing; verily by establishing it under its own deity he becomes resplendent. He establishes with Darbha grass, for variety. He establishes with Darbha; verily winning it from the waters and the plants he establishes it. The sacrificial cake is offered on five potsherds; the seasons are five; verily he wins it from the seasons and establishes it.

i. 5. 2. He * who removes the fire casts away the sacrifice and cattle. The sacrificial cake is offered on five potsherds; the sacrifice is fivefold, cattle are fivefold; verily he wins the sacrifice and cattle. Now he who removes the fire is the slayer of the hero among the gods; Brahmans desirous of holiness did not aforetime eat his food; the Yājyās and Anuvākyās are in the Pañkti metre; the sacrifice is fivefold, man is fivefold; verily making recompense to the gods for the hero the re-establishes the fire [1]. They are of a hundred syllables; man lives a hundred years and has a hundred powers; verily he rests on life and power. In that Agni when established does not prosper, (it is that he is) desiring a greater portion; in that it is all Agni's, that is his prosperity. Speech is uttered together in the house of him who removes the fire; the sacrificer is liable to perish on account of the uttering together of speech. There are discriminations, to sever

a i.e. in place of the idamakāsthāni of the Adheya.

Cf. KS. viii. 15; ix. 1, 2; KapS. viii. 3-5; MS. 1. 7. 3-5; KB. i. 3-5 (CCS. ii. 5. 1-31). This section gives notes on some details of the rite.

These verses will be seen in TS, iv. 4, 4.7 w-c.

According to Sayana the number of 100 syllables is made up of 24 + 25 + 25 + 26, and this is clearly how the text takes the verses, and shows that the text before it already had the exact form of its present condition. For the agrist with purd see Delbrück, Allind. Synt. p. 286.

It is not essential to read rairam though possible. For the wergild of. Vodic Index, ii. 331-333.

From the usual form in the Adhana; they use then for the four Prayajas (see ApCS, v. 28. 6 with comm.): samidha agnagna djyanya viyantı; taninapda agnae agna djyanya vetu; ido agninagna djyanya viyantı; barhir agnim agna djyanya vetu. For the ordinary forms cf. MS. iv. 10. 3; KS, xx. 15; TB. iii. 5. 5. 1; ACS. ii. 8. 6; CCS. i. 7. 1 sep.; MCS. v. 1. 2. 6. Cf. BCS. iii. 2. There is no change in the lifth Prayaja. The Vasat comes after the speech and preserve the sacrificer [2]. He makes a discrimination; verily he makes the holy power (Brahman). He speaks the Yajus, muttering;1 it is as if one who has found a rich treasure hides it. To Agni Svistakrt he speaks aloud; it is as if one who has found a rich treasure is fain to go openly.2 Uttering the discrimination he makes the Vasat cry with the foresacrifice; verily he leaves not his abode. The sacrificial cake is the sacrificer, the oblations are cattle; in that he offers these libations on either side of the cake [8], he thus surrounds the sacrificer on either side with cattle. 'After performing the Yajus and collecting the apparatus', they say: 4 'the apparatus should not be collected, the Yajus should not be performed,' they say: the apparatus should be collected and the Yajus performed, for the prosperity of the sacrifice. The sacrificial fee is a renovated chariot, a newly-sewn garment, a draught ox let loose again, for the prosperity of the re-establishing. 'Seven are thy kindling-sticks, O Agni, seven thy tongues'; (with these words 5) he offers the Agnihotra. Wherever there is anything of his nature, thence [4] does he win him. Now he who removes the fire is the slayer of the hero among the gods, Varuna is the exactor of the recompense; he should make an offering on eleven potsherds to Agni and Varuna; 6 him whom he slays and him who exacts the recompense he delights with their own portion; the sacrificer is not ruined.

i. 5. 4. 'Earth' in depth, sky in breadth,' he says; with this benediction he establishes it. The serpents thought that they were growing worn out: Kasarnîra Kadraveya beheld this Mantra; then did they strike off their worn-out skins. With the verses of the queen of serpents he establishes the Garhapatya, and so renewing it he establishes it as immortal. Pure food did not come to the earth; she [1] beheld this Mantra; then food came to her. In that he establishes the Garhapatya with the verses of the serpent queen (it serves) for the winning of food: verily he establishes it firm in the (earth). 'If thee in anger I have scattered', he says; verily he conceals it from him. 'Again thee we relight', he says; verily he kindles him all together. 'Whatever of thee scattered in rage', he says; verily by means of the deities [2] he unites him. The sacrifice of him who removes the fire is split; he pays reverence with a verse containing the word Brhaspati; Brhaspati is the holy power (Brahman) of the gods; verily by holy power (Brahman) he unites the sacrifice, 'May he unite this scattered sacrifice', he says, for continuity. 'May the All-gods rejoice herein', he says; verily continuing the sacrifice he points it out to the gods. 'Seven are thy kindling-sticks, O Agni, seven thy tongues' [3], he says, for sevenfold in seven-wise are the dear forms of Agni; verily he wins them. 'Return with strength', 'Return with wealth', (with these words) he offers oblations on either side of the sacrificial cake; verily with strength and with wealth he surrounds on either side the sacrificer. The Adityas went from this world to yonder world, they were thirsty in yonder world, having returned to this world and having established the fire, they offered these oblations; they prospered, they went to the world of heaven. He, who establishes a fire after the second establishment, should offer these oblations; he prospers with the prosperity wherewith the Adityas prospered,

- KS. reads repartinem and pagarrinem and omits the last Pada. MS. has schootentak subasiftum, omits g and inverts e and f. VS. agrees with MS., but has also dynmentum and delabelihos. The passage is metrical.

- ³ idaprajus is also read in MS.; KS. has the more usual idaprajuse and baheir. Hertel (VOJ. xxv. 163-186) sees in Ida, the male-female source of life, the parent of Pururavas. But see Keith, JRAS, 1913, pp. 412-417.

i. 5. 7. There 2 is no sacrifice without a Saman. 'As we approach the sacrifice', he says; verily he yokes a Stoma with it. 'Approach', he says; offspring and cattle approach the world; verily he approaches cattle and offspring and this world. 'After his ancient splendour', he says; the ancient is the world of heaven; verily he mounts upon the world of heaven. 'Agni is the head of the sky, the height', he says; verily he makes him the head [1] of his equals, and verily from the world of the gods he rests in the world of men. 'Here hath he first been established by the establishers', he says; verily he makes him the principal. 'Ye twain shall be summoned, O Indra and Agni', he says; verily he wins might and force. 'This is thy due place of birth', he says; wealth is cattle; verily he wins cattle. With six (verses) he pays reverence; the seasons are six [2]; verily he rests on the seasons. With six subsequent (verses) he pays reverence; they make up twelve; the year has twelve months; verily he rests on the year. Just as a man, a horse, a cow, are worn out, so the fire when established wears out; at the end of the year he pays reverence with (verses) containing the words Agni and pu; verily he renews it and makes it unageing, and also purifies it. He pays reverence: that is his union. He pays reverence [3]; that is his bond. He pays reverence; that is his appeal. He pays reverence; that is as if an inferior brings (something) to a superior and pays him honour. 'Thou art giver of life, O Agni; give me life', he says, for he is a giver of life. 'Thou art giver of radiance, O Agni; give me radiance', he says, for he is a giver of radiance. 'Thou art guardian of the body, O Agni; guard my body',

This is RV. x. 87. 22, which has handrow and bhangurdeatdm; in AV. vii. 71. 1; viii. 3. 22 'catah appears (with catam in Sayana on viii. 3. 22 and in Paipp). Whitney takes bhangurdeatch as 'of the destructive', but mentions Henry's version, 'trompeur', which is similar to that of MW. 'crafty'. But 'perishable' is not bad sense. Roth emends (ZDMG. xlviii. 108) to viprum, but I think needlessly; Whitney suggests dysidearnam but also doubtfully.

he says [4], for he is a guardian of the body. 'O Agni, whatever is deficient in my body, do thou make that good for me', he says; 'whatever is deficient in my offspring and cattle, do thou make that good for me', he says in effect. 'O thou of various splendour, in safety may I reach the end of thee', he says; that of various splendour is the night. The Brahmans aforetime feared its not dawning; 1 verily he wins the dawn. 'Kindling thee for a hundred winters' [5], he says; man lives a hundred years and has a hundred powers; verily he rests on life and power. This is a pipe " with projections; by it the gods made piercings of hundreds of the Asuras; in that he takes up the kindling-stick with this verse, the sacrificer hurls the hundred-slaying (verse) as a bolt against his enemy to lay (him) low without fail. 'Thou, O Agni, hast attained the radiance of the sun'. he says; 'that thou art, thus may I be', he says in effect. 'Thou, O Agni, hast the radiance of the sun', he says; verily he invokes this blessing. i. 5. 8. 'I's gaze on offspring', he says; verily he wins all the domesticated animals. 'Ye are water; may I share your water', he says, for they are water. 'Ye are greatness; may I share your greatness', he says, for they are greatness. 'Ye are might; may I share your might', he says, for they are might, 'Ye are strength; may I share your strength', he says [1], for they are strength. 'Ye wealthy ones, stay', he says; the wealthy ones are cattle; verily he makes cattle stay with himself. 'Be ye here; go not hence', he says; verily he makes them constant, departing not. Now one fire is piled with bricks, one with cattle. 'Thou art composed of every form', (with these words) he strokes the calf; verily he piles it up and makes it piled with cattle. He falls away [2] from this world who pays reverence to the Ahavaniya; he pays reverence to the Garhapatya; verily he rests on this world, and also he makes amends to the Garhapatya. He pays reverence with Gayatrī verses; the Gayatrī is brilliance; verily he confers brilliance upon himself; moreover in that he repeats the triad (of verses), (it serves) for continuity. Because of the Garhapatya * men are born with two feet; to him who knowing thus pays reverence to the Garhapatya with (verses) of two feet [3], a hero son is born. 'With strength I gaze upon you; gaze on me with strength', he says; verily he invokes this blessing. 'That excellent glory of Savitr', he says, for instigation. 'Famous the Soma-presser', he says; verily he wins the Soma draught. 'Make, O lord of prayer', he says; verily he wins splendour. 'Never art thou barren', he says; no barren' night does he pass [4], who knowing thus pays reverence to the fire. 'May we (set) thee around, O Agni, as a fort', he says; verily he sets around a barrier, that nothing be spilt. 'O Agni, lord of the house', he says; that is according to the text. 'For a hundred winters', he says; 'for a hundred winters may I kindle thee', he says in effect. He utters the name of his son; verily he makes him an eater of food. 'This blessing I invoke bringing light for the race', he should say, who has no son born; verily is born to him a son brilliant and resplendent. 'This blessing I invoke bringing light for N. N.', he should say who has a son born; verily he confers upon him brilliance and splendour.

i. 5. 9. He 3 offers the Agnihotra; whatever there is, of the Sacrificer's own, that is (still) his. In the generative organ * he pours seed, for Agni is the generative organ. Then he burns at the end the plants; they then grow more numerous. In that he offers in the evening, he thus pours seed, and makes it productive by the morning (offering). Seed when poured does not prove fruitful unless modified by Tvastr; as many modifications of seed when poured [1] as Tvastr makes, in so many shapes does it become fruitful; the sacrificer is the divine Tvastr. He pays reverence with many (verses); verily he makes many modifications of the seed when poured. He is fruitful and day by day becomes greater, who knowing thus pays reverence to the fire. 'The day was the gods', the night the Asuras'. The Asuras entered night with all the precious wealth of the gods [2]; the gods thought that they were abandoned; they perceived,5 'The night is Agni's, cattle are Agni's; verily let us praise Agni here; he being praised by us will restore our cattle.' They praised Agni; he praised by them delivered their cattle from night to day; the gods having gained their cattle performed their desires. He who knowing thus pays reverence to the fire becomes possessed of cattle [3]. The sun went from this world to yonder world; he having gone to yonder world bethought him again of this world; having returned to this world he had fear of death, for this world is, as it were, yoked with death. He reflected, 'Let me praise Agni here; he, praised, will make me go to the world of heaven.' He praised Agni;

b ipagean and amangents almost seem to have changed places, but the use of both is quite possible as in the text, he, praised, made him go to the world of heaven. He who [4] knowing thus pays reverence to the fire, goes to the world of heaven and lives all his days. He mounts these two fires who pays reverence to them; he acts according to the desires of one who has attained a higher place.1 He pays reverence at night, not in the morning, for vows are mingled at night, the bad and the good are on the same level, the fire is the light, the evening is the darkness; in that [5] he pays reverence by night, he overcomes the darkness by light. 'Should reverence be paid to the fire or not?' they say; 'he who day by day makes a present to a man and then begs of him assuredly molests him; and who then will day by day beg of the gods?' Then they say, 'The sacrificer sacrifices for the sake of the benediction.'2 The reverence of the fire is [6] the benediction of him who has established a fire; therefore reverence should be paid to the fire. Prajapati created cattle; being created they entered day and night; he recovered them by means of the metres. In that he pays reverence with the metres, he seeks to recover his own. 'There is not monotony' then', they say, 'if one pays reverence day by day.' If a man pays reverence to the fire facing it, it burns him; if with averted (face), he is deprived of offspring and cattle; he should pay reverence with (face) somewhat to the side, then (the fire) does not burn him, he is not deprived of offspring or cattle.

* Cf. KS. vil. 3; iv. 14; MS. i. 5. 4 is like KS, vii. 3, but has practically nothing in common with TS. ; VS. i. 5, 6. None of these passages is really parallel. For the Brahmana ef. TS. i. 6. 7. 2; 7. 6, 6; 8. 3. 4. The Mantras a-f belong to the reverence paid by one who is about to go on a journey involving absence for a night or more; the first accompanies the reverence paid to the Ahavaniya, b-d that paid on his return, and f the offering made by the Adhvaryu if the absence exceeds nine nights; see ApCS. vi. 24.7; 26. 4, 7; MCS, i. 6. 3. 9, 16; ACS, ii. 5. 3, 10. The other Mantras are dargikoyajamanamanirah; q is used as water is sipped or touched preparatory to the performance of the wate; & is said by the sacrificer, if a Brahman, standing to the south of the Ahavaniya; with i he addresses the oblation as it is offered; with k he performs the 'yoking' of the sacriflee, looking at the fires ; I-n belong again to a later point in this ritual; according to Baudh. I accompanies the depositing of the potsherds; when a potsherd is broken m and n are used; with m it is put into water, the verse being spoken by the Brahman priest, and with a something is joined and put on the potsherds, if the break is above the upadhina; I is the kapilarimoca pronounced by the Adhvaryu and the Yajamana. For g-k, see ApCS, iv. 29; 3, 2; 4, 5, 9; MCS, i. 4. 1. 5, 18; KS. ii. 1. 11, 88; for 1, ApCS. iv. 14. 5; MS. i. 3. 5. 22; KS. ii. 8. 16; for m and m, ApCS, ix. 13, 8-10; MCS, iii. 1, 25; 4, 9; AÇS, iii. 14, 16; ÇÇS, xiii. 12. 18; for g and h BCS. i. 12 and Do thou bear it until I return; O Agni, may I bear thy name.

- b My name and thine, O all-knower, Which like men changing garments we bear, Let us exchange again, Thou for life, and we to live.⁹
- c Homage to Agni, the unpierced, Homage to the unapproachable, homage to the king! Irresistible is Agni [1], the very vigorous, all-conquering, Powerful, the best, the Gandharva.
- d O Agni, the gods have thee for father, Offer to thee oblations, and have thee as an umpire; With life, with lordship of cattle (endow) me And bestow on me good fortune.
- e Agni here is of all the best, He is most adorable, Most ready to win (us) a thousand; To him be all good strength.
- f Mind, light, rejoice in the oblation; May be unite the scattered sacrifice; The offerings at dawn and evening I unite with oblation and ghee.
- g Rich in milk are the plants [2], The milk of the shoot is rich in milk, With the milk of the milk of the waters, O Indra, do thou unite me.
- h O Agni, lord of vows, I shall perform this vow; may I accomplish it; may it be successful for me."
 - i Agni, the priest, I summon hither;
 The gods worthy of sacrifice whom we invoke.

iii. 15, where the use of y-n is given at length, n beginning at idhmo ridih and accompanying the Samtani offerings of butter in the Ahavaniya.

In KS. vii. 3 no agre is read as in KapS. v. 2; the second line reads to trum gopdyd punar dadai is (mad aites, Caland, VOJ. xxiii. 60) rayum bibbarama tara nama. For the rayum of. b here. The lack of accent both in Sanhitä and Päda points, as observed by Weber (Ind. Stud. xiii. 92), to an old error of the text; cf. iv. 3, 11 o; v. 7, 2 d.

* KS. reads mama ca nama tara jatavedo (Caland suggests adding ca, but if anything is to be done it should be transposed as in TS.) and omits ys: in the next line, it has to bibhyro dakşase floase ca yathāyatham ca nau tanvau jātavedah as in KapS. v. 2. vayām is curious, but the TS. makes better sense than KS.

³ This is peculiar to TS. The metre is bad on any theory.

Also peculiar to TS.

⁵ This is not exactly paralleled elsewhere; the first part agrees with KS. vii. 14.

Already in i. 5. 3 g.

This is VS. i. 5; MS. iv. 9. 24; below i. 6.

- ⁷ This is a common verse, read as here in VS, xxvi. 8 (cf. for a and b xviii. 72; AV. vi. 35. 1 with Whitney's note) save for usiye; KS. iv. 16 agrees with VS.; MS. iii. 16. 4 with TS.

- This is RV. iii. 3. 11 without change. The verse is of doubtful sense; Sayana takes the sense to be that the sacrificer obtains profit; Oldenberg, 'Für des Vaiçvanara Wundertaten lies das Hohe strömen'; Caland and Henry, p. 374, 'a fait jaillir', the subject being Agni conceived as different from Vaiçvanara, and the source being the 'œuvres miraculeuses'. - Of, for c-q KS. v. 6; MS. i. 4. 4; this section deals with the verses of the sacrificer in the new and full moon ritual, of which a part has been seen in i. 5. 10. 3, 4. Mantra a is used when the butter has fallen from the offering-spoon; the sacrificer pours it back with the sruc or utters the verse only, ApÇS. ix. 18. 4; according to BÇS. iii. 15 he collects it; b is used while the Adhyaryu and the sacrificer

b Thou art butter, thou art truth, thou art the overseer of truth, thou art the oblation of Vaiçvānara, of the All-gods, with pure strength, of true might; thou art power, overpowering; overpower hostility, overpower those who practise hostility; overpower enmity, overpower those who practise enmity; thou art of a thousandfold strength; do thou quicken me; thou art of butter the butter; thou art of truth the truth; thou hast true life [1]; thou hast true strength; with truth I besprinkle thee; may I share thee that art such.

lock at the butter, ibid, ii. 6, 9; in BÇS. iii. 16 the sacrificer is made to lock at it; c-q belong to the taking of portions of the butter with the juhü, spabhṛt and dhruwā; according to the ritual, BÇS. iii. 16, adopted in Bhāsk. and Sāyaṇa, c-f accompany the taking of portions in the juhü, g-o in the upabḥṛt, p in the dhruwā, and q the filling up (abhipūryumāṇam); this does not agree with either BÇS. i. 12; ĀpÇS. ii. 7. 6 seq. or the other texts (Bhār., Hir., KÇS. ii. 7. 11 seq.) in Hillebrandt, New und Vollmendsopfer, pp. 68, 64. The curious misdivision of the text in i. 5, 10 and here is not easy to understand.

The 'five peoples' are here meant and not of course twenty-five. For the five peoples see Vedic Index, i. 466-468.

* vipi seems natural, but is not essential.

- bhúh is uncertain in sense: Sáyana makes it an injunctive, 'be thou ours', which may be correct.
- 4 Cf. KS. iv. 14; v. 1; xii. 2; MS. ii. 2, 3. For the Brahmana see TS. i. 6. 10. With Mantras a-c the sacrificer addresses the encircling-sticks as they are placed around, the middle first, then the south. then the north ; the yoking of the fire is performed with d; d (second part) is pronounced as the kindling-sticks are placed on; s accompanies the placing of the oblation within the Vedi; the placing of the Agnihotra is accompanied with f; a the placing on of the firewood; with it is taken the first part of h; the second part accompanies the spreading of the straw ; i the besprinkling with butter from the dipping-ladle; k the besprinkling with butter

d I yoke thee with the divine Brahman,

To bear this oblation, O wise one; Kindling thee, may we live long with good children.

With good heroes, bearing thee tribute.

reservit may mean either 'winning wealth' for myself (so Sāyaṇa), or 'giving it' to others, viz. the sajātas. See ii, 3, 9 a.

According to the ritual of Baudh, which is followed in Bhāsk, and Sāyaṇa, the first part of à belongs to g. The division here is that of Weber and is not directly supported by any authority: it is no doubt possibly correct. v By sacrifice to the god Indra, may I be powerful.

x By sacrifice to the god Agni Svistakrt, may I attain security through the sacrifice, enjoying long life.

refer to the ropes to tie the horse, and raçmin are the reins. But the whole theory rests on the view that a saddle-horse is meant. In MS. i. 4. 1, 5; ii. 12. 3; KS. v. 3; xxxii. 3 raçandm is read. The first part to recanám is seen in AV. vii. 78. 1, where see Whitney's note. MS. and KS. have a different second part.

Bhask, and Sayana note that the sacrificer is to regard himself as Visnu in the ritual.

n O Agni, lord of the house, through thee as lord of the house, may I be a good lord of the house; through me as lord of the house, mayst thou be a good lord of the house; for a hundred winters; this blessing I invoke bringing light for the race; this blessing I invoke bringing light for N. N.

i. 6. 7. Even 2 as the Soma (sacrifices) come together in competition, so the new and full moon (sacrifices) are sacrifices which come together in competition. Whose sacrifice then do the gods approach and whose not? He, who among many sacrificers first appropriates the gods, sacrifices to them when the next day comes. The Ahavanīya is the abode of the gods, between the fires of cattle, the Garhapatya of men, the Anvaharyapacana of the fathers. He takes the fire; verily he appropriates [1] the gods in their own abode; to them he sacrifices when the next day comes. By means of a vow is Agni, lord of vows, pure, the Brahman is a supporter of vows. When about to undertake a vow he should say, 'O Agni, lord of vows, I shall perform the vow.' Agni is the lord of vows among the gods; verily after announcement to him he undertakes the vow. At the full moon be undertakes his vow with the (strewing of the) straw,3 with the (driving away of the) calves at new moon; for that is their abode. 'The fires, both in the front and at the back, must be bestrewed', they say; men [2] indeed desire what is bestrewed,4 and how much more the gods whose is a new dwelling. With him, when sacrifice is to be made on the next day, do the gods dwell, who knowing this bestrews the fire. 'The sacrificer should win both beasts of the wild and of the village', they say; in that he refrains from those of the village, thereby be wins them; in that he eats of the wild, thereby he wins them of the wild. If he were to fast without eating, the Pitrs would be his divinity [3]; he eats of the wild, the wild is power, and so he bestows power upon himself. If he were to fast without eating, he would be hungry; if he were to eat, Rudra would plan evil against his cattle; he partakes of water; that is neither eaten nor not eaten; he is not hungry and Rudra does not plot evil against his cattle. The sacrificer is a bolt, the enemy of man is hunger; in that he fasts without eating, he straightway smites with the bolt the enemy, hunger.

This section refers in particular to the putting of the sticks on the fires at the outset of the new and full moon sacrifice, and the Vrata, a vow of fasting, performed by the sacrificer. The Mantras commented on are in i. 5. 10. 3. Cf. Hillebrandt, pp. 3 seg.

For these operations of. Hillebrandt, pp. 4, 7. It will be seen that the author gives them as alternatives for the different params, not as parts of one service.

i. 6. 8. He who offers sacrifice without faith, they place not faith in his sacrifice. He brings waters forward, the waters are faith; verily with faith he offers sacrifice, and both gods and men place faith in his sacrifice. They say, 'They foam over the barrier, they foam over speech, but over mind they do not foam.' He brings them forward with mind; mind is this (earth) [1]; verily with this (earth) he brings them forward. The sacrifice of him who knows thus does not spill. He collects the weapons of the sacrifice; the weapons of the sacrifice are the sacrifice; verily he collects the sacrifice. If he were to collect them one by one, they would have the Pitrs as their divinity; if all together, (they would have) men as their divinity. He collects them in pairs, and so he makes the form of the Yajya and the Anuvakya, and thus there is a pair. If a man knows the ten weapons of the sacrifice, his sacrifice is in order at the beginning. The wooden sword [2], the potsherds, the offering-spoon, the basket, the black antelope skin, the pin, the mortar and pestle, the lower and upper millstones, these are the ten weapons of the sacrifice; the sacrifice of him who knows thus is in order at the beginning. If a man sacrifices after announcing the sacrifice to the gods, they delight in his sacrifice. He should as the oblation is being offered recite (the words), 'Agni, the priest, him I summon hither' [3]. Thus he announces

p. 178, who attributes the whole cause to that analogy, but hardly correctly.

the sacrifice to the gods and sacrifices, and the gods delight in his sacrifice. This is the taking of the sacrifice and so after taking the sacrifice he sacrifices. After speaking he remains silent, to support the sacrifice. Now Prajāpati performed the sacrifice with mind; verily he performs the sacrifice with mind to prevent the Rakṣases following. He who yokes the sacrifice when the yoking (time) arrives yokes it indeed among the yokers. Who (ka) yoketh thee? Let him yoke thee', he says. Ka is Prajāpati; verily by Prajāpati he yokes it; he yokes indeed among the yokers.

i. 6. 9. Prajāpati 2 created the sacrifices, the Agnihotra, the Agniștoma, the full moon sacrifice, the Ukthya, the new moon sacrifice and the Atiratra. These he meted out; the Agnistoma was the size of the Agnihotra, the Ukthya that of the full moon sacrifice, the Atiratra that of the new moon sacrifice. He who knowing thus offers the Agnihotra obtains as much as by offering the Agnistoma; he who knowing thus offers the full moon sacrifice obtains as much as by offering the Ukthya [1]; he who knowing thus offers the new moon sacrifice obtains as much as by offering the Atiratra. This sacrifice was in the beginning Paramesthin's, and by means of it he reached the supreme goal. He furnished Prajāpati with it, and by means of it Prajāpati reached the supreme goal. He furnished Indra with it, and by means of it Indra reached the supreme goal. He furnished Agni and Soma with it, and by means of it Agni and Soma reached the supreme goal. He who [2] knowing thus offers the new and full moon sacrifices reaches the supreme goal. He who sacrifices with an abundant offering is multiplied with offspring, with cattle, with pairings. 'The year has twelve months, there are twelve pairs of new and full moon sacrifices; these are to be produced', they say. He lets the calf go free and puts the pot on the fire: he puts down (the rice),3 and beats the millstones together; he scatters (the grains) and collects the potsherds; the cake [3] he puts on the fire and the melted butter; he throws the clump of grass, and gathers it in; he surrounds the Vedi and he girds the wife (of the sacrificer); he puts in place the anointing waters and the melted butter. These are the twelve pairs 4 in the new and full moon sacrifices. He, who thus sacrifices with these, sacrifices with an abundant offering and is multiplied with offspring, with cattle, with pairings.

i.o. he is pre-eminent among those who perform the sacrifice. The contrast of monaed and vdcd is of course between silence and utterance of Mantras. Cf. v. 5, 3, 1.

There is no precise parallel to this passage in the other texts.

The sense according to Bhask. is white ulaidate, and this appears to be certain: draidan denotes of course draidulathale as Sayana takes it. According to Bhask. adhivapati draidi tandulan.

^{*} There are seven here and five in i. 6. 8.

i. 6. 10. 'Thou' art secure; may I be secure among my equals', he says; verily he makes them secure.2 'Thou art dread; may I be dread among my equals'; verily he makes them harmonious. 'Thou art overcoming; may I be overcoming among my equals,' he says; verily he overthrows him who rises against him. 'I yoke thee with the divine Brahman', he says; this is the yoking of the fire; verily [1] with it he yokes it. With the prosperous part of the sacrifice the gods went to the world of heaven, with the unsuccessful part they overcame the Asuras. 'Whatever, O Agni, in this sacrifice of mine may be spoiled', he says; verily with the prosperous part of the sacrifice the sacrificer goes to the world of heaven, with the unsuccessful part he overcomes the foes. With these Vyāhrtis he should set down the Agnihotra. The Agnihotra is the beginning of the sacrifice, these Vyahrtis are the Brahman; verily at the beginning of the sacrifice he makes the Brahman [2]. When the year is completed he should thus with these (Vyahrtis) perform the setting down; verily with the Brahman he surrounds the year on both sides. He who is undertaking the new and full moon and the four monthly offerings should set in place the oblations with these Vyahrtis. The new and full moon and the four monthly sacrifices are the beginning of the sacrifice, these Vyahrtis are the Brahman; verily at the beginning of the sacrifice he makes the Brahman. When the year is completed, he should thus with them (Vyahrtis) set down (the oblations), and so with the Brahman he surrounds the year on both sides. To the kingly class falls the blessing of the part of the sacrifice which is performed with the Saman [3]; to the people 3 (falls) the blessing of what (is performed) with the Re; now the Brahman sacrifices with an offering without a blessing; when he is about to recite the kindling-verses he should first insert the Vyahrtis; verily he makes the Brahman the commencement, and thus the Brahman sacrifices with an offering which has a blessing. If he desire of a sacrificer, 'May the blessing of his sacrifice fall to his foe', he should insert for him those Vyāhṛtis in the Puronuvākyā (verse); the Puronuvākyā has the foe for its divinity; verily the blessing of his sacrifice falls to his foe [4]. If he desire of sacrificers, 'May the blessing of the sacrifice fall to them equally', he should place for them one of the Vyahrtis at the half-verse of the Puronuvakya, one before

¹ Cf. KS. xxxi. 15; MS. i. 4. 5. The verses commented on are in i. 6, 2, 1-3.

It is rather curious that the text should render the Mantra as meaning that the safetas are to be darwed: it is not the natural sense of the verse, and the text does not apply the principle of interpretation to the next Mantra.

To Sayana rastram means the kingdom, vio the people (praid), but the use of rastram is clearly equivalent to the masculine.

the Yājyā, and one at the half-verse of the Yājyā, and thus the blessing of the sacrifice falls to them equally. Even as Parjanya rains down good rain, so the sacrifice rains for the sacrificer; they surround the water with a mound,¹ the sacrificer surrounds the sacrifice with a blessing. 'Thou art mind derived from Prajāpati [5], with mind and true existence do thou enter me', he says; mind is derived from Prajāpati, the sacrifice is derived from Prajāpati; verily he confers upon himself mind and the sacrifice. 'Thou art speech, derived from Indra, destroying the foe; do thou enter me with speech, with power', he says; speech is derived from Indra; verily he confers upon himself speech as connected with Indra.

i. 6. 11. He 2 who knows the seventeenfold Prajāpati as connected with the sacrifice rests secure through the sacrifice, and falls not away from the sacrifice. 'Do thou proclaim's has four syllables; 'Be it proclaimed' has four syllables; 'Utter' has two syllables; 'We that do utter' has five syllables; the Vasat has two syllables; this is the seventeenfold Prajāpati as connected with the sacrifice; he who knows thus rests secure through the sacrifice and does not fall away from the sacrifice. He who knows the beginning, the support, the end of the sacrifice [1] reaches the end with a secure and uninjured sacrifice. 'Do thou proclaim'; 'Be it proclaimed'; 'Utter'; 'We that do utter'; the Vasat call, these are the beginning, the support, the end of the sacrifice; he who knows thus reaches the end with a secure and uninjured sacrifice. He who knows the milking of the generous one 5 milks her indeed. The generous one is the sacrifice; (with the words) 'Do thou proclaim', he calls her; with 'Be it proclaimed' [2], he lets (the calf) go up to her; with 'Utter', he raises (the pail); with 'We that do utter', he sits down beside her, and with the Vasat call he milks. This is the milking of the generous one;

Sayana takes this clause as an explanation of the mode in which the blessing of a sacrifice in the case of an Ahina or Sattra is spread evenly over the whole body of sacrificers, but this is not borne out by the text: shald seems to refer to catching water in a tank or enclosure for use, though it may be merely = shall 'vessel'.

³ Cf. KS. xxxii. 1; the verses commented on are in I. 6, 2, 3, 4.

The rendering of these phrases is made to suit the number of syllables: win means 'utter the Yajya', and is addressed to the Hotr by the Adhvaryu, just as d praraya is addressed by him to the Agnidhra; ye' wijamāhe is said by the Hotr and his attendant priests: it is uncertain if ye' is the relative or a mere particle. graupai, according to Caland and Henry, L'Agnisjoma, p. xxv, is a bad translation of an Indo-Iranian equivalent (graspo ashs), and should rather have been ashs groups; but neither this nor any other theory of graupat or vasse is satisfactory; cf. Hillebrandt, Rituallitteratur, p. 99.

According to Sayana the first is the beginning, the second to fourth the pratichal or substance or middle, the last the end.

Sunpti is here personified as a cow, as Aditi often is; cf. Macdonell, Vedic Mythology, p. 129.

he who knows thus milks her indeed. The gods performed a sacrificial session; the quarters were dried up; they discerned this moist set of five; (with the words) 'Do thou proclaim', they produced the east wind; with 'Be it proclaimed', they caused the clouds to mass together; with 'Utter' they begat [3] the lightning; with 'We that do sacrifice' they made rain to fall, and with the Vasat call they caused the thunder to roll. Then for them the quarters were made to swell; for him who knows thus the quarters are made to swell. One knows Prajāpati, Prajāpati knows one; whom Prajapati knows, he becomes pure. This is the Prajapati of the texts,5 'Do thou proclaim', 'Be it proclaimed', 'Utter', 'We that do utter', the Vasat call; he who knows thus becomes pure. 'Of the seasons spring [4] I delight', he says; the fore-sacrifices are the seasons; verily he delights the seasons; they delighted place themselves in order for him; the seasons are in order for him who knows thus. 'By sacrifice to the gods, Agni and Soma, may I be possessed of sight', he says; the sacrifice is possessed of sight through Agni and Soma; verily by means of them he confers sight upon himself. 'By sacrifice to the god Agni, may I be an eater of food', he says; Agni is among the gods the eater of food; verily by means of him [5] he confers the eating of food upon himself. 'Thou art a deceiver; may I be undeceived; may I deceive N. N.', he says; by that deceit the gods deceived the Asuras; verily by this he deceives his foe. 'By sacrifice to the gods, Agni and Soma, may I be a slayer of foes', he says; by means of Agni and Soma Indra slew Vrtra; verily by means of them he lays low his foe. 'By sacrifice to the gods, Indra and Agni, may I be powerful and an eater of food', he says; verily he becomes powerful and an eater of food. 'By sacrifice to the god Indra, may I be powerful', he says; verily he becomes powerful. 'By sacrifice to the god Mahendra, may I attain superiority and greatness', he says; verily he attains superiority and greatness. 'By sacrifice to the god Agni Sviştakrt, may I attain security through the sacrifice, enjoying long life', he says; verily he confers long life upon himself and attains security through the sacrifice.

- 1 For Dhisana as a goddess see Pischel, Ved. Stud. ii. St; for the second half of the verse the best mode is to take the earlier as dependent on the last part, and witrawithd as equivalent to withd titra or witratithā: Oldenberg (Rgreda-Noten, i. 244) thinks that there are two points 'wo und wie', which approximates to, but is not exactly the same as, the above explanation; he also points out that the real sense may be yatra-havante, or again that a verb is omitted with patra, or that there is a confusion of two sentences, one going with this first half line, and the next with havants; no is inevitable with havants, for we are part of the ubhaye.

This verse occurs in a variant form in AV. xix. 42. 4, where see Whitney's note: if

- hisanton is read, then a verb must be supplied, but AV, suggests here dhird (it has dhuyih), norah is quite hopeless, in view of agrind, and the obvious view is that assers saire is meant, and this may well = I; cf. later, Speijer, Sanskrit Syntax, § 273. AV. has quite differently indrena ma indriváni. Cf. Weber, Ind. Stud. xiii. 95, n.
- 2 The verse is one of the very few not identified by Weber: it is RV. x. 152. 3, but with the variants of gritran for rakeas, nuda for jahi, and bhamito for sytrahan. AV. i. 21, 3 and SV. ii. 1217 agree with RV. The RV. version is also found in ApCS, xx. 20. 7, which quotes the verse in full and evidently does not rely on the TS.

PRAPĀTHAKA VII

The Part of the Sacrificer in the New and Full Moon Sacrifices

i. 7. 1. Cattle 1 attend the cooked offerings 2 of him who has established a fire. The cooked offering is the Ida; it is placed in the world of the sacrifice between the fore- and the after-offerings. Over it as it is brought up he should say, 'O thou of fair rain colour, come hither'; the cattle are the Ida; verily he summons cattle. The gods milked the sacrifice, the sacrifice milked the Asuras; the Asuras, being milked by the sacrifice, were defeated; he, who knowing the milking of the sacrifice [1] sacrifices, milks another sacrificer. 'May the blessing of this sacrifice be fulfilled for me', he says; this is the milking of the sacrifice; verily with it he milks it. The cow is milked willingly, and willingly the Ida is milked for the sacrificer; these are the teats of Ida, 'Ida is invoked'; Vayu is the calf. When the Hotr summons the Ida, then the sacrificer looking at the Hotr should in mind reflect on Vayu [2]; verily he lets the calf go to the mother. By the whole sacrifice the gods went to the world of heaven; Manu laboured with the cooked offering; the Ida went to Manu; the gods and the Asuras called severally upon her, the gods directly,3 the Asuras indirectly; she went to the gods; the cattle choose the gods, cattle deserted but Ida and upabite occur in i. 6. 3. The actual formula is given in MS. iv. 13. 5, 7, 10; KS. xxvii. 5; TB. iii. 5. 8. 2; 13. 2, and in GB. i. 8. 1. 24, 25; it is also set out at length in AGS. i. 7. 7, where it is of some extent, and ends sahantariksena camaderyena rayund. This version explains the reference to Väyu which the text leaves hopelessly obscure.

The number and nature of these offerings varies with different Sütra texts, and there are also similar sacrifices in the Grhya ritual (Hillebrandt, Rituallitteratur, p. 20)

b. e. Idepahuti is the order of the gods, upukutede that of the Asuras. The exact form of the invocation is not found in the TS.,

the Asuras. If he desire of a man, 'May he be without cattle', he should invoke the Ida indirectly for him; verily he becomes without cattle [3]. If he desire of a man, 'May he be rich in cattle', he should invoke the Ida directly for him; verily he becomes rich in cattle. The theologians say, 'He would invoke the Ida indeed who in invoking the Ida should invoke himself in the Ida.' 'To us be she dear, victorious, bountiful', he says; verily in invoking the Ida he invokes himself in the Ida. The Ida is as it were a breach in the sacrifice; half they eat [4], half they wipe;1 in this regard the sacrifice of the Asuras was broken; the gods united it by the holy power (Brahman). 'May Brhaspati extend this for us', he says; Brhaspati is the holy power (Brahman) 2 of the gods; verily by the holy power (Brahman) he unites the sacrifice. 'May he unite this scattered sacrifice', he says, for continuity. 'May the All-gods rejoice here', he says; verily continuing the sacrifice he indicates it to the gods. The [5] sacrificial fee which he gives at the sacrifice his cattle accompany; he having sacrificed is like to become without cattle; 'the sacrificer must so arrange', they say, 'that he may place among the gods 3 what is given, but keep his cattle with himself.' 'Swell, O ruddy one', he says; the ruddy one is the sacrifice; verily he magnifies the sacrifice; thus he places among the gods what is given, but keeps his cattle with himself. 'May (my act) as I give be not destroyed', he says; verily he avoids destruction; 'May (my act) as I work not perish', he says; verily he attains prosperity. i. 7. 2. Sameravas 4 Sauvarcanasa said to Tuminja Aupoditi: 'When thou hast been a Hotr of Sattrins, what Ida hast thou invoked?' 'Her I have invoked', he said, 'who supports the gods by her expiration, men by her cross-breathing, and the Pitrs by her inspiration.' 'Does she divide, or does she not divide?' (he asked). 'She divides', he replied. 'Her body then hast thou invoked', he said. Her body is the cow [1]; of the cow were they two talking. She who is given in the sacrifice supports the gods with her expiration; she by whom men live (supports) men by her cross-breathing; she whom they slay for the Fathers (supports) the Fathers by her inspiration; he who knows thus becomes rich in cattle. 'Her too I have invoked', he said, 'who is available to people as they increase.'5 'Her food then [2] hast thou invoked', he replied. This food

² Cf. the frequent use of Brahman of Brhaspati, Geldner, Ved. Stud. ii. 144, and see Vedte Index, ii. 78. It is not in my opinion necessary to take the sense as more than 'holy power' in the frequent use as here; see also p. 486, n. 1.

a depatrd refers to the Brahmans, according to Sayana, and it is not easy to avoid the conclusion that this is correct; cf. i. 7. 3. 1 and Vedic Index, ii. 82.

is plants, plants are available to people as they increase; he who knows thus becomes an eater of food. 'Her too I have invoked', he said, 'who supports people in distress and succours them as they improve.' 'Her support then hast thou invoked', he replied. Her support is this (earth) [3], this (earth) supports people in distress and succours them as they improve; he who knows thus finds support. 'Her too I have invoked', he said, 'in whose step people drink the ghee they live upon.' 'Does she divide, or does she not divide?' (he asked). 'She does not divide', he said, 'but she propagates.' 'Indeed hast thou invoked the Idā herself', he replied. The Idā is rain; in the step of rain people drink the ghee they live upon; he who knows thus is propagated with offspring; he becomes an eater of food.

i. 7. 3. Secretly 1 offering is made to one set of gods, openly to another. The gods who receive offering secretly, he thus offers to them in sacrifice; in that he brings the Anvāhārya mess 2—the Brahmans are the gods openly—them he verily delights. This is his sacrificial fee: verily he mends the rent in the sacrifice, whatever in the sacrifice is harsh or is injured, that he makes good (anvaharati) [1] with the Anvaharya mess, and that is why it has its name. Now the priests are the messengers of the gods; in that he brings the Anvāhārya mess, he delights the messengers of the gods. Prajāpati distributed the sacrifice to the gods; he reflected that he was empty; he perceived this Anvähärya mess unallotted; he conferred it upon himself. The Anvāhārya is connected with Prajāpati; he, who knowing thus brings the Anvähärya, assuredly enjoys Prajāpati.3 An unlimited amount should be poured out, Prajapati is unlimited; (verily it serves) to win Prajapati [2]. Whatever the gods did in the sacrifice, the Asuras did; the gods perceived the Anvāhārya connected with Prajāpati; they seized it; then the gods prospered, the Asuras were defeated; he who knowing thus brings the Anvähärya prospers himself, his foe is defeated. By the sacrifice there is offering,4 by the cooked food satisfying. He who knowing thus brings the Anvähärya, accomplishes at once sacrifice and satisfaction.

also below in prity dibharantir grandti: the accent in the first case is normal in the Sanhitä (Weber, Ind. Sand. xiii. 65), and even the second is not unparalleled if the words are to be taken as one, but the connexion with grands seems more probable and somewhat better sense; there is, however, little difference.

² The Anvähärya is a mess of food cooked with rice given to the priests as a Dak-sinä; see Eggeling, SBE. xii. 7, 49.

There is some uncertainty whether relative is really transitive, or if the accusative is a quasi-cognate accusative, 'prospers in relation to Prajapati'. Ourtel on JUB. i. 37. 2 seq. compares pus with accusative. For other cases of its use of the passages in i. 4, 27, n. 2.

^{*} igin and partin here clearly indicate the sense of igipartin as one who has sacrificed and has satisfied the priests; see Windisch, Festgruss on Böhtlingk, pp. 115-118.

'Thou art the portion of Prajāpati' [3], he says; verily he unites Prajāpati with his own portion. 'Full of strength and milk', he says; verily he confers upon him strength and milk. 'Protect my expiration and inspiration; protect my breathing together and cross-breathing', he says; verily he invokes this blessing. 'Thou art imperishable, for imperishableness thee; mayst thou not perish for me, yonder, in yonder world', he says. Food perishes in yonder world, for given hence in yonder world people live upon it; in that he touches thus, he makes it imperishable; his food perishes not in yonder world.

i. 7. 4. 'By 1 sacrifice to the divine strew, may I be possessed of children', he says; by the strew Prajapati created offspring; verily he creates offspring. 'By sacrifice to the god Naraçansa, may I be possessed of cattle', he says; by Narāçansa Prajāpati created cattle; verily he creates cattle. 'By sacrifice to the god, Agni Svistakrt, may I attain security through the sacrifice, having long life', he says; verily he confers life on himself, and finds support through the sacrifice. With the victory of the new and full moon sacrifices [1] the gods conquered, and by means of the new and full moon sacrifices they drove away the Asuras. 'May I be victorious through the victory of Agni', he says; verily through the victory of the deities in the new and full moon sacrifices the sacrificer is victorious, and by means of the new and full moon offerings drives away his enemies. With two verses containing the word 'strength', he accompanies the separation (of the ladles); strength is food; verily he wins food; (he uses) two, for support. He who sacrifices knowing the two milkings of the sacrifice milks thus the sacrifice on both sides [2], in front and behind; this is one milking of the sacrifice, another is in the Ida.2 When the Hotr utters the name of the sacrificer, then he should say, 'Hither these blessings have come, fain for milking'; verily he milks the deities which he praises together; verily he milks the sacrifice on both sides, in front and behind. 'With the red steed may Agni convey thee to the god', he says; these are the steeds of the gods [3], the straw is the sacrificer; in that he casts forward the straw with them, he makes the sacrificers to go by the steeds of the gods to the world of heaven. 'I unyoke thy head ropes, thy reins', he says; that is the unyoking of Agni; verily thereby he unyokes him. 'By sacrifice to the god Visnu, by the sacrifice may I attain health and wealth and security', he says; Visnu is the sacrifice; verily the sacrifice finds support at the end. 'By sacrifice to the god Soma, possessing good seed [4], may I impregnate seed', he says; Soma is the impregnator of seed; verily he confers seed upon himself. By sacrifice to the god Tvaṣṭr, may I prosper the form of cattle'; Tvaṣṭr is the form-maker of the pairings of cattle, and thereby he confers upon himself the form of cattle. 'The wives of the gods, Agni, the lord of the house, are the pair of the sacrifice; by sacrifice to these deities may I be propagated with a pair.' 'Thou art the bundle, thou art gain, may I gain', he says; by the bundle (vedéna) the gods won (avindanta) the desirable wealth of the Asuras, and that is why the bundle has its name. Whatever of his foe's he may covet, the name of that he should utter; verily he wins it all from him. 'May the bundle bestow increase of wealth, rich in ghee, rich in houses, a thousandfold, strong', he says; he obtains a thousand cattle. In his offspring a strong one is born who knows thus,

i. 7. 5. Through 1 the emptying of the Dhruva the sacrifice is emptied, through the sacrifice the sacrificer, through the sacrificer offspring. Through the swelling of the Dhruva, the sacrifice is made to swell, through the sacrifice the sacrificer, through the sacrificer offspring. 'Let the Dhruva swell with ghee', he says; verily he makes the Dhruva to swell; through its swelling the sacrifice is made to swell, through the sacrifice the sacrificer, through the sacrificer offspring. 'Prajāpati's is the world called Vibhan. In it I place thee along with the sacrificer', he says [1]; the world of Prajapati, named Vibhan, is this (world); verily he places it in it along with the sacrificer. In that he sacrifices he is as it were emptied; in that he eats the sacrificer's portion, he fills himself. The sacrifice is the size of the sacrificer's portion, the sacrificer is the sacrifice; in that he eats the sacrificer's portion, he places the sacrifice in the sacrifice. There is good grass and good water where the strew and the waters are [2]; the Vedi is the abode of the sacrificer; in that he places the full bowl within the Vedi, he establishes good grass and good water in his own abode. 'Thou art real, be real for me', he says; the sacrifice is the waters, ambrosia is the water; verily he bestows upon himself the sacrifice and the waters. All creatures attend him who is performing the vow. 'In the eastern quarter may the gods, the priests, make (me) bright', he says; this is the concluding bath of the new and full moon sacrifices [3]. He goes to the bath along with the creatures which attend him as he performs the vow. Headed by Visnu the gods won these worlds by the metres so as to be irrecoverable; 2 in that he takes the steps of Visnu, ¹ Cf. KS, xxxii, 5; MS, i. 4, 7. The verses commented on are in i. 6, 5.

This is a curious form (anapajayyan), found also in GB. i. 4. 2. 9; iii. 4. 2. 8, and the Pet. Lexx. call it an adverb. It is not a regular gerundive in view of the accent, but there are parallels for the accent in other ya derivatives (Whitney, Sansk. Gramm. § 1213). It seems to be a cognate accusative, cf. Delbrück, Altind. Synt. p. 137.

the sacrificer becoming Viṣṇu wins these worlds by the metres so as to be irrecoverable. 'Thou art the step of Viṣṇu, smiting imprecations', he says; the earth is the Gāyatrī, the atmosphere is connected with the Triṣṭubh, the sky is the Jagatī, the quarters are connected with the Anustubh; verily by the metres he wins these worlds in order.

i. 7. 6. 'We' have come to the heaven: to the heaven we have come', he says; verily he goes to the world of heaven. 'May I not be cut off from seeing thee; what heat is thine, to that of thee may I not be brought low', he says; that is according to the text. 'Thou art good, the best of rays; thou art life-bestowing, bestow life upon me', he says; verily he invokes this blessing. He falls away from this world, who [1] takes the steps of Visnu, for from the world of heaven the steps of Visnu are taken. The theologians say, 'He indeed would take the steps of Visnu who after acquiring these worlds of his foe should descend again to this world." This is his return descent to this world, in that he says, 'Here do I exclude my enemy N. N. from these quarters, from this sky'; verily having acquired these worlds of his foe he descends again to this world. 'I have been united [2] with the light', he says; verily he rests on this world. 'I turn the turning of Indra', he says; Indra is yonder sun; verily he turns his turning. He turns to the right; verily he revolves round his own strength; therefore the right side of a man is the stronger; verily also he turns the turning of the sun. 'May I be united with offspring, offspring with me', be says; verily [3] he invokes this blessing. 'Kindled, O Agni, shine for me; kindling thee, O Agni, may I shine', he says; that is according to the text. 'Be rich the sacrifice; may I be rich', he says; verily he invokes this blessing. Within the Garhapatya much variegated work is performed; with two verses to Agni, the purifier, he pays reverence to the Garhapatya; verily he purifies the fire, he purifies himself; (he uses) two for support. 'O Agni, lord of the house', he says [4]; that is according to the text. 'For a hundred winters', he says; 'for a hundred winters may I kindle thee', he says in effect. He utters the name of his son; verily he makes him an eater of food. 'This prayer I utter, bringing light for the race', he should say who has no son born to him, verily is born to him a brilliant and resplendent son. 'This prayer I utter, bringing light to N. N.', he should say who has a son born [5]; verily he bestows upon him brilliance and splendour. He who having yoked the sacrifice does not let it free becomes without a support. 'Who yoketh thee? Let him set thee free', he says; Who (ka) is Prajapati; verily by Prajāpati he yokes him, by Prajāpati he lets him free, for support.

The vow if not released is liable to consume (the sacrificer); 'O Agni, lord of vows, I have performed my vow', he says; verily he releases his vow [6], for atonement, to prevent burning. The sacrifice goes away, and turns not back; to him who sacrifices knowing the restoration of the sacrifice it does turn back; 'The sacrifice hath become, it hath come into being', he says; this is the restoration of the sacrifice, and thereby he restores it. Excellence has not been obtained by him who having established a fire has no retinue; cattle indeed are the retinue of a Brahman. Having sacrificed, he should step forward to the east and say, 'Rich in cattle, in sheep, O Agni, in horses is the sacrificer'; he wins his retinue, he obtains a thousand cattle, in his offspring a strong one is born.

The Vājapeya

- i. 7. 7. a O¹ god Savitr, instigate the sacrifice, instigate the lord of the sacrifice for good luck; may the divine Gandharva who purifieth thoughts purify our thought; may the lord of speech to-day make sweet our utterance.²
 - b Thou art the thunderbolt of Indra, slaying obstructions, with thee may this one smite Vrtra.
 - c On the instigation of strength, the mother, the mighty one, We shall proclaim with our speech, Aditi, by name, Into whom all this world hath entered; In her may the god Savitr instigate right for us.³
 - d In the waters [1] is ambrosia, in the waters is medicine; Through the guidance of the waters Be ye steeds, O ye that are strong.⁴
- 1 Cf. KS. xiii. 14; MS. i. 11. 1; VS. ix. 1, 5-7. For the Brahmana see TB, i. 3, 5; KS, xiv. 6; MS. i. 11, 6; CB. v. 1, 1, 14; 4. S-6. This section begins the Mantras for the Vajapeya (i. 7. 7-12), but the TS. has nothing of a Brahmana. In the ritual Mantra a accompanies an oblation to Savity as a preliminary to the consecration; b is addressed to the chariot which is placed on the chariot stand (rathavakana) which is within the southern 'hip' (growl) of the Vedi, with the Mantra it is taken down in preparation for the race; caccompanies the removal of the chariot to the Uttaravedi; d'accompanies the washing of the steeds, e the yoking of the right-hand horse; with f he rubs its back; with g he approaches the chariot; with h he strokes the two sides of the chariot; see EÇS. xi. 2, 6, 7, and cf. ApÇS. xviii. 2. 10, 19; 3. 1-3; 4. 5, 6; MÇS. vii. 1; KÇS. xiv. 1. 11; 3. 1-6. For the rite itself see Eggeling, SBE. xli. 1-40; Hillebrandt, Ved. Myth. i. 247 seq.; Rituallitteratur, pp. 141-143, Oldenberg, Religion des Vedu, p. 381, n., and especially Weber, SPAW. 1892, pp. 765 seq.

³ This is a clear case where the Black Yajurvedas with vacous are much superior to value of VS. The verse recurs in iv. 1, 1 g.

- ² KS. has dharmam, but dharma, which VS. also preserves, is clearly correct.
- It is uncertain whether pricasticu means 'praises' or rather 'guidance'.

e Or Vayu thee, or Manu thee,3

The seven and twenty Gandharvas;

They first yoked the steed;

They placed swiftness in it.

f Child of the waters, swift one, the towering onrushing wave most fain to win the prize, with it may he win the prize.2

g Thou art the stepping of Viṣṇu, thou art the step of Viṣṇu, thou art the stride of Viṣṇu.

h May the two Ankas, the two Nyankas, which are on either side of the chariot,

Speeding on with the rushing wind,

The far-darting, powerful one, the winged one,

The fires which are furtherers, further us.

 7. 8. a On the instigation of the god Savitr, through Brhaspati, winner of the prize, may I win the prize.

¹ The disjunctives seem to be only Vayu or Manu, the Gandharvas being intended in any case.

* KS. inserts kaksidman and pratürtir and has vajasās, and, omitting ayam, the first person assam.

This verse which is not in the other Sanhitas appears also in PB. i. 7. 5; PGS, iii. 14; MGS, i. 18, 4, &c. The Anka and Nyanka Sayana explains as the side and the wheel respectively, quoting in his favour ApCS, xviii. 4. 6, where the verse is applied to the sides or the wheels; Bhask, gives wild guesses. What they were is unknown, Vedic Index, i. 10.

4 Cf. KS. xiii. 14; xiv. 1; MS. i. 11. 2, 3; VS. ix. 9-19. For the Brahmana see TB. i. S. 6; KS. xiv. 7; MS. i. 11. 7; CB, v. 1. 4, 15-5, 27, These Mantras describe the chariot race; with a the priest mounts the chariot; with & the Brahman mounts a wheel placed on a pole in the Catvala or pit; with e the priests are encouraged to cry aloud and to beat drums; with d the whip is invoked as it is handed to the priest; with e he touches each horse in turn, the right, the middle, and the left; with f the steeds are addressed; g-l are used to address the horses as they race forward to the goal; m is used by the Agnidhra to accompany an oblation, if it is reported that a chariot has been broken; n accompanies the unyoking of the chariot; o is said as the steeds are made to smell the mess of boiled rice (naivara caru) which is the offering in this part of the rite, p when they are made to smell it when the rite is over ; q is said as the chariots are taken down, and r as the drums are taken down; cf. BCS. xi. 7 (o, a, b, d, e, f), 8 (c, g-l, m, n), 9 (p-r). In ApCS. xviii. 4.7-5.3 the ritual differs somewhat: a is used by the Brahman priest, and is preceded by c addressed to the drums; b is said by the sacrificer; then the two yoke horses are caused to smell the naicara with o; with p (last words) he wipes the froth on their mouths; with d the Adhvaryu mounts the chariot and whips the steeds with e; as the horses go he recites four verses (f, regarded as two, the second being vi yojana, g and k), and four verses (i-m) he recites as they return from the mark which shows the turningplace; with a he offers an oblation when the horses have returned, and o is used as he lets the horses smell the cars on their return, and p (last part) as they have the froth wiped off their mouths; g either is used for the loosening of the drums or in touching all the steeds (r seems to be included in q); in this respect BÇS. is clearly better, and generally it follows more closely the text : it is clear in any case that the Mantra o is displaced. Cf. also MCS. vii. 1. 2; KCS. xviii. 3, 8-4. 12, b On the instigation of the god Savitr, through Brhaspati, winner of the prize, may I mount the highest vault.

c To Indra utter your voices, make Indra win the prize, Indra hath won the prize.

d O whip, strong, having strength * for the prizes, Do thou in the contests strengthen the steeds.

e The swift art thou, the runner, the strong.

f O steeds, hasten for the prize; conquer on the instigation of the Maruts; measure ye the leagues; establish the ways [1]; attain the goal.

g For each prize aid us, O ye steeds,
For the rewards, O ye wise, immortal, righteous ones;
Drink of this mead, rejoice in it;
Delighted go by paths on which the gods go.

h May the swift coursers, who hear the call, All hearken to our cry.

i Strong limbed, winning a thousand, Eager to gain in the gaining of praise,' The steeds, which have won in the contests great prizes. May they be propitious to us when we call.

k Among the gods, strong limbed, good praisers, Destroying the serpent, the wolf, the Raksases, For ever may they remove from us evil [2].

For this curious form cf. Whitney, Sank. Gramm. § 904; dheanayit, iv. 6. 9 d, where RV. I. 162, 15 has dheanayit. In p we have jigicdheah; in ii. 5. 2. 4 ajahttam.

The exact sense of these epithets need not be pressed; Pischel (Ved. Stud. 1. 10) takes vajous vajoni as 'victorious in the contest'; and he thinks that vajonical means 'possessing mares' (vajoni), but here at least that sense is hardly very satisfactory; the real aim is of course the piling up of words with vajon in them; the sense is wholly secondary. Cf. p. 131, n. 3.

The exact sense of skubh is not clear; it may be that the horses are not to fall on the way, or merely that they are to make out a path for themselves. KS. has skubhnuvaniah as has VS.

The division of this Mantra is not satisfactory. In RV. vii. S8. 7 and 8 are found com no bharants—divided and then g; and in x. 64. 6 there is found the rest of h with the variants is a train for sanismical and dhanam for rainam; clearly the division of verses should be altered by omitting i as a separate entity and dividing it between hand k. The text followed by Weber is the school tradition of Bhask. and Sayana as he avows in his comm., and Baudh, evidently did not accept it, as he includes I in the four verses addressed to the steeds. KS, agrees with RV. in having verses equivalent to vii. 38. 7, 8; z. 64. 6, in this order, but it reads sunisprical with dhand; MS, agrees with KS.; VS. agrees with RV. in text save for sanisyacah (and VSK. agrees in this also), but the order is vil. 38. 7; x. 64. 6; vii. 38. 8. medhanidi is uncertain in sense: If it is equivalent to devitata in the sense 'in divine service', a possible meaning is given, but this is uncertain, as said should have some reference to 'gain'.

5 sinemi means kripram according to Sayana and Nirukta, xii. 14; Naigh, iii. 27 gives instead purana and this suggests sine as the source, but the formation is very strange and not yet explained, for sa-nemi is not very satisfactory as a solution.

- l This steed speedeth his swift course, Bound at the neck, the shoulder, and the mouth; Displaying his strength Dadhikra Springeth along the bends of the ways.
- M After him as he hasteneth in triumphant speed Bloweth the wind as after the wing of the bird, Of the impetuous eagle, (after him) Dadhikravan, As in his might he crosseth the winding ways.
- May there come to me the instigation of strength; May there come sky and earth with all healing; Come to me father [3] and mother; ³ May Soma come to me for immortality.
- o O ye steeds, prize winning, about to run for the prize, about to win the prize, do ye touch Brhaspati's portion.
- p O ye steeds, prize winning, that have run for the prize, that have won the prize, do ye be pure in Bṛhaspati's portion.
 - q True hath been the compact That ye did make with Indra.*
 - " Ye have made Indra win the prize," O trees; now be ye loosed.
- i. 7. 9. a Thou art the caul of the kingly class, thou art the womb of the kingly class.
- In this verse, which is RV. iv. 40. 4, KS. has the later normal gradua and MS. apipakya axin, which is not so good metre: the "pakya is doubtless due to the view that the side was the place where the horse was tied, not the shoulder; kratum Sayana refers to the 'will' of the sadin, 'rider', ignoring the fact that charits horses were driven, not ridden: KS., MS., and VS. have sameinispadat in place of samiaiciteat. Weber's view (SPAW. 1892, p. 790, n. 1) that Dadhikra is either a genitive in form or sense, or a mistake for Dadhikro is quite needless.
- The version of this verse, which is RV. iv. 40. 3 without variant, follows Oldenberg (Rgveda-Noten, i. 301): the only really doubtful point is what ankasim denotes: it may be a part of the horse's body; Sayana takes it as the graduacinum vastracamarādikam, while it seems natural to make it an equivalent of patham ankasim above. That paraam is an accusative is practically certain: for the impersonal use of the verb see Delbrück, Altind. Synt. p. 4.

- For pitird maisird ca, for which MS, has pitare vicearupab, while VSK, has gantam, cf. Macdonell, Ved. Gramm, p. 156. The allusion may be to heaven and earth, or merely to terrestrial parents. See also i. 3, 10, n. 2.
- KS. has end and smiring: MS. has samely and both samidadhram, which is not so good as the proper "dhadhram, and is no doubt a more correction.
- ⁵ VS. like KS. and MS. have anipipata; Macdonell, Ved. Gramm. p. 375. Weber (Ind. Stud. xiii, 102) cites anifitipat, ii. 1, 11, 3.
- Cf. KS. xiv. 1; MS. i. 11. 3; VS. ix. 20, 21. For the Brähmana see TB. i. 3. 7; KS. xiv. 8; MS. i. 11. 7, 8; ÇB. v. 2. 1. 1-14. This section gives the Mantras for the mounting of the post by the sacrificer, who thus approaches the gods; with a he and his wife are clad in garments of silk (tirpya) and Darbha grass respectively; with b he addresses his wife who replies ribara hi sivar, and he then undertakes to mount for both; with c twelve libations with the dipping-ladle are made, equal

- b O wife, come hither to the heaven; let us two mount! Yes, let us two mount the heaven; I will mount the heaven for us both.
- c Strength, instigation, the later born, inspiration, heaven, the head, the Vyaçniya, the offspring of the last, the last, the offspring of being, being, the overlord.¹
- d May life accord with the sacrifice, may expiration accord with the sacrifice, may inspiration accord with the sacrifice [1], may cross-breathing accord with the sacrifice, may eye accord with the sacrifice, may ear accord with the sacrifice, may mind accord with the sacrifice, may the body accord with the sacrifice, may the sacrifice accord with the sacrifice.
- e We have come to the heaven, to the gods; we have become immortal; we have become the offspring of Prajāpati.
- f May I be united with offspring, offspring with me; may I be united with increase of wealth, increase of wealth with me.
- g For food thee! For proper food thee! For strength thee! For the conquering of strength thee!
 - h Thou art ambrosia, thou art prospering, thou art begetting.

in number to the months of the year ; with d the post is fixed; with a the sacrificer stretches out his arms as a sign of his reaching the top of the post which he mounts by steps (akramana); with f he looks down on the ground; with g the Adhvaryu on the east, the Brahman on the south, the Hotr on the west, and the Udgate on the north address him while presenting him with salt in a pouch of Acvattha wood ; with h in his descent he puts his right foot on a piece of gold (kiranyani çatamanam); see BÇS. xi. 11 (4, a-f), 12; ApCS; xviii, 5, 7-6, 2 agrees in substance; cf. MCS, vii. 1, 8; KCS, xiv. 5, 1-10,

This Mantra is interesting, for the TB. does not clearly make the second part applicable to the wife, as it continues pundly enom, which cannot be rendered, as it is taken by Sāyaṇa, as a reference to the paintdeham. Possibly, however, the reading of TB. abould be endm, or even as it stands the reference may be to the sacrificer, though the wife really puts on the Darbha garment as in CB. v. 2. 1. 8. The Mantra is singularly out of place in the Vājapeys as a Brahmanical offering, and doubtless points to an earlier form of the sacrifice, Weber, p. 795, n. 6.

- For the use of hi in the reply to a question, see Delbrück, Allind. Synt. p. 524. The position of röhden with the accent makes sire belong primarily to ihi, while MS. and KS. put ihi after röhden. Cf. Weber, Ind. Stud. xiii. 71, 72; Pāṇinl, viii. 1. 52; ÇB. v. 2. 1. 10; schol. to Pāṇini, viii. 1. 56.
- These names are presumably also mythic names of the months of the years: the lists differ in the different texts both in form and number, MS. and KS. having thirteen, that is, including an intercalary month: vyagniya is of uncertain sense and is read differently in all the texts. KS. has vyagnui, MS. vatyagnua (rather vatyagnua or vatyagnua), VS. vyagnuvin. Cf. Weber, p. 793, and see below iv. 7. 11, n. 2.
- The giving of salt to the sacrificer by Vaicyas (so in CB, and KCS.) or by the priests (ApCS, recognizes both) is of importance as a clear case of a fertility spell. The Vaicyas were probably the proper givers as they would be interested in salt for their cattle. According to the ritual the priests gave the bags one after the other, the sacrificer turning round to receive each, other bags being given face to face to imitate the action of eating (Sayana).

- 7. 10. a The instigation of strength pressed in aforetime This Soma, the lord in the plants, in the waters; Be they full of sweetness for us; May we as Purchitas watch over the kingship.
 - b The instigation of strength hath pervaded This (world) and all these worlds on every side; He goeth around knowing pre-eminence,² Increasing offspring and prosperity for us.
 - c The instigation of strength rested on this sky
 And all these worlds as king;
 May the wise one make the niggard to be generous,
 And may he accord us wealth [1] with all heroes.
 - d O Agni, speak to us; To us be thou kindly disposed; Further us, O lord of the world; Thou art the giver of wealth to us.

 - f Aryaman, Bṛhaspati, Indra, Impel to give us gifts, Speech, Viṣṇu, Sarasvatī, And Savitṛ the strong.
- Off. KS. xiv. 2; MS. 1. 11. 4; VS. ix. 23-30, which all differ in minor points only. For the Brahmana see TB. i. 3. 8; KS. xiv. 8; MS. i. 11. 8; CB. v. 2. 2. 5-14. This section gives the Mantras for the Annahomas, which are seven offerings made with an Udumbara offering-ladle before the Sviştakrt from an Udumbara wooden tub of all kinds of plants mixed with ghee (a-g): with h the Adhvaryu anoints the sacrificer who is seated on a black antelope skin, with the hair on the top, facing the priest; see BCS. xi. 7 (cf. x. 54), and cf. ApCS. xviii. 6. 5, 6; MCS. vii. 1. 1, 3; KCS. xiv. 5. 23, 24.
- iridjam may be correct, but VS. has no for idim and sinemi raja, while KS. has viraja, and MS. agrees with TS. idim is necessary if a is read, as there must be an object for dbabhara to be coupled with a ; KS. which omits a still has idam: it also inverts the second half-verses of b and c.
- KS. has devine, a more corruption, and it ends some rayini subactrum of passill, which agrees with its reading in a, some rajangadhine apon, but which is not supported by the other Sanhitäs: there is the usual variation of dapageti in the other texts; sirrovirum may mean 'with all (i.e. abundant) heroes (i.e. heroic offspring)', or possibly 'with heroes unharmed'.
- * pro yorks can hardly be barely an equivalent of pro daddin in s, and the sense 'further' seems reasonable. The verse is RV. x. 141. 1, but that has probon and vicas. KS. and MS. agree with RV.; VS. has prob but schooragit. KS. and MS. have roses, and VS. roim hi dhanadd asi.
- This is RV. x. 141. 2, which has rayo for proving; VS. has paid for bloigals, and so KS., and KS. and VS. have only in Padas c, d proving deep dead and the maj.
- ⁴ This is RV. x. 141. 5, which has vacum for vacum; KS. and MS. insert virtum, but this is apparently merely a further stage

g Soma the king, Varuṇa, Agni, we grasp, The Ādityas, Viṣṇu, Sūrya

h On the instigation of the god Savitr, with the arms of the Açvins, with the hands of Püsan, with the bond of Sarasvati, of speech, the binder, I anoint thee with the lordship of Agni, with the lordship of Indra,³ of Brhaspati I anoint thee.

- i. 7. 11. Agni³ with one syllable won speech; the Açvins with two syllables won expiration and inspiration; Vispu with three syllables won the three worlds; Soma with four syllables won four-footed cattle; Pūṣan with five syllables won the Pañkti; Dhātṛ with six syllables won the six seasons; the Maruts with seven syllables won the seven-footed Çakvarī; Bṛhaspati with eight syllables won the Gūyatrī; Mitra with nine syllables won the threefold Stoma '[1]; Varuṇa with ten syllables won the Virāj; Indra with eleven syllables won the Trisṭubh; the All-gods with twelve syllables won the Jagatī; the Vasus with thirteen syllables won the thirteenfold Stoma; the Rudras with fourteen syllables won the fourteenfold Stoma; the Ādityas with fifteen syllables won the fifteenfold Stoma; Aditi with sixteen syllables won the seventeenfold Stoma; Prajāpati with seventeen syllables won the seventeenfold Stoma.
- i. 7. 12. a Thou art taken with a support; thee that sittest among men, that of corruption. Brhaspati as Brahman is meant, not Brahman, the god; the ce is almost conclusive against Weber's view that the god may be meant.

³ This is RV. x. 141. 3, which has stone for turunum and ends the half-line with girbhir haramahe.

Of course a full Mantra is intended to be supplied with indraspa, and Baudh, has ted after it in his citation of it as a sign of this. Sayana insists on taking yanhir as meaning Agni (because no doubt of the seeming incorrectness of the masquline), while Weber, pointing out that in CB. v. 2, 2, 14 vigrenim decinim is an alternative, while KCS, xiv. 5, 26 allows the omission of raccia, suggests that Indraspa was originally there. But this is needless. VS, has pantrips dadhāmi.

³ Cf. KS. xiv. 4; MS. i. 11. 10; VS. ix. 31-34. For this the Brahmana has nothing, but see CB. v. 2, 2, 17. These Mantras are pronounced by the sacrificer at the bidding of the Adhvaryu, and he thus is to obtain the same success as the gods whose victories he pronounces; see BCS. xi. 7, where the rite is placed after i. 7. 85 and before i. 7. 8 d. In ApCS. xviii. 4. 19 the Mantras are said as the horses run the course, but this is clearly not the view of the TS. See also KCS. xiv. 5. 18; MCS. vii. 1. 2.

Because it consists of three verses made into nine.

6 Cf. KS. xiv. 3; MS. i. 11. 4; VS. ix. 2-4. For the Brāhmaņa see TB. i. 3. 9; ÇB. v. 1. 2. 4-7. This section gives the Mantras for the five Atigrāhya cups after the Āgrayaņa (a-s) and the seventeen cups of Soma for Prajāpati (f and g which are really one in the ritual), after the Sodaçin, corresponding with which there are seventeen of Surā offered by the Pratiprasthātr with a Mantra given in KS. and MS., viz. RV. x. 131. 2; see BÇS. xi. 3; ĀpÇS. xviii. 1. 13, 15, 17; 2. 1-9; MÇS. vii 1. 2; KÇS. xiv. 5.6 (a-s); xxv. 6. 10 (f).

i. 7. 13. a The months, the woods,

1 This is not very clear and the other texts differ in the first part completely : viciprivagam is apparently 'without cipras', and cipra denotes 'jars' or 'lips', i.e. vessels without months or handles, probably. KS. has tilsam vicienyanam (MS. eicicnanam), presumably with the same sense. It is also doubtful what pascajoninal means here; presumably it really has no further sense than 'five' and it may be corrupt : there is no exact parallel to it in KS. (which has only ayantar vipra 5 saff) or MS. (which has graha viçoqianina niyantar riprayamaht. There are five Grahas, of course. The three best are those to Agni, Indra, and Surya. agrabhim is peculiar to the TS.; see Macdonell, Ved. Gramm, p. 383. The koçah is presumably conceived as emptied into the Grahas. All the Grahas are deposited on the Khara as usual with the Mantra end to winih.

2 This verse is almost unintelligible: it appears in a slightly different form in AV. vii. 8, 1, and in a series of Satras (ACS. II. 19. 32; CCS. III. 17. 1; KCS. xxv. 6, 10) as well as in KS. and MS. (i. 10. 3), but not in VS. MS. and the RV. Sütras end svåm yeit tandm tandm airayata; KS. may mean this (ix. 6; xiv. 8; v. 5. 12) as it has and goir tomil timoden airayata; AV, has sväyä taned tanim airayata; aharinam is read by KS, and the RV. Sūtras, and MS. has prutydā: KCS. agrees with TS, eardys must mean 'be is a broad path for a boon ', but the sense of the last Pada is irrecoverable, as it is a favourite piece of mysticism.

described in ii. 2. 8. The verses are as usual taken with little variation from the RV.; a = x. 89. 13; b = vi. 25. 8; c and d = x. 86. 11, 12; c = ii. 12. 1; f = vii. 25. 1; g = iv. 20. 10; h = iii. 36, 9; l and m = vi. 47. 12, 13 (x. 131. 6, 7); n = i. 30, 13; c = x. 133. 1.

This is found above, i. 6. 12 d, and it is remarkable that it is quoted here in full. The sense of this passage is uncertain: but it seems best to assume that the first Påda is a main sentence and not part of the second Påda: vispadriyak must mean 'indiscriminately': the god is to be careful of his action.

k The giver, the bolt-bearer, the bull, the overpowering, The impetuous, the king, slayer of Vrtra, drinker of the Soma, Seated at this sacrifice on the strew, Be thou health and wealth to the sacrificer.²

Indra the protector, the granter of aid with his aids;

All knowing, be kindly to us;

Let him restrain the enemy, let him make security,

May we be lords of strength [4].

May we enjoy the favour of him the worshipful, And also his lovingkindness; May the protector Indra, the granter of aid, For ever fend far from us the enemy.

 Rich banquets be ours with Indra, With mighty strength, Wherewith fed we may be glad.

This verse is a sort of cento: Pādas a and b are = RV, v. 40. 4 except that RV. begins with r/igi; c = RV. iii. 35. 6 α; d = RV. iii, 17. 3.

Cf. KS. xv. 1; MS. ii. 6. 1, 2; VS. ix. 35. For the Brāhmaņa see TB. i. 6. 1; ÇB. v. 2. 3. 2-9. This section begins the treatment of the Rājasūya, and in a Brāhmaṇa-like passage some details are given which are amplified in TB. I. 6. 1. The three Mantras are part of the offering to Nirrti: with the first an offering is made in the Garhapatya to appease Rudra; then by the south the sacrificer goes, taking an ember from the fire, to where there is a natural cleft (irina) and deposits his ember there and makes an offering with the second Mantra; he retires by the same path and offers in the Garhapatya with the third; see BCS, xii, 1, 2; ApCS, xviii. 8, 10-9, 1; and ef. KCS. xv. 1. 9. 10. For the ritual generally, cf. Hillebrandt, Rituallitteratur, pp. 143-147; Weber, Uber die Königesceihe, Abh. support 1 he (offers) on one potsherd to Nirrti; the sacrificial fee is a black garment with a black fringe.

Go away, hail! rejoicing in the oblation.

This is thy share, O Nirrti;
O thou who hast prospered, thou art rich in oblation;
Free him from evil. Hail!

Honour to him who hath done this.

He offers an oblation to Āditya; the sacrificial fee is a choice (ox). (He offers) to Agni and Viṣṇu on eleven potsherds; the sacrificial fee is a dwarf beast of burden. (He offers) to Agni and Soma [1] on eleven potsherds; the sacrificial fee is gold. (He offers) to Indra on eleven potsherds; the sacrificial fee is a bull as a beast of burden. (He offers) to Agni on eight potsherds, and curds to Indra; the sacrificial fee is a bull as a beast of burden. (He offers) to Indra and Agni on twelve potsherds, and an oblation (caru) to the All-gods; the sacrificial fee is a first-born calf. (He offers) an oblation of millet to Soma; the sacrificial fee is a garment. (He offers) an oblation to Sarasvatī, and an oblation to Sarasvant; the sacrificial fee is a pair of oxen.

i. 8. 2. He³ offers to Agni on eight potsherds, an oblation to Soma, to Savitr on twelve potsherds, an oblation to Sarasvatī, an oblation to Pūṣan, to the Maruts on seven potsherds, clotted curds to the All-gods, and on eleven potsherds to sky and earth.

There is no mention here of the rite against Keetriya which figures in the KS. and MS. versions.

This section deals with the Varunapraghasa rite, the second of the four monthly sacrifices; the Mantras accompany the rite by which the wife of the sacrificer is purified by admitting the names of her lovers, if any: the Praprasthatr leads the wife up and makes her say Mantra b; with c the husband pronounces the Puronuvākyā; with d both repeat the Yaiva of the offering of kurumbha pattras with a basket (carpa), and with e they depart from the fire altar of the south in which the offering has taken place; see BCS. xii. 3; v. 5-9; ApCS. viii. 6. 16-25; MCS. i. 7. 4. 12-16; KCS. v. 5. 10-18; Hillebrandt, Rituallitteratur. pp. 116, 117; Oldenberg, Religion des Veda, pp. 441 seq.

The campa here must have a definite sense something like what is attributed to it by the comm.: tandoless pisyamaness description; see Pedic Index, ii. 356. The Sutras differ in the direction in which the grain falls or is thrown; the version of Baudh.makes it west and east, that of Ap, north and west.

- b The voracious we invoke, The Maruts who bear the sacrifice, Rejoicing in the mush.¹
- c Be not against us in battles, O god Indra;
 Let there be expiation to satisfy thee, O impetuous one;
 For great is the barley heap of this bountiful one;
 Rich in oblation are the Maruts whom our song praises.
- d The wrong we have done in village or wild, In the assembly, in our members, The wrong to Çudra or Aryan, The wrong contrary to the law of either, Of that thou art the expistion; hail!
- c The doers of the deed have performed the deed, With wondrous speech; Having done the deed to the gods go ye To your home, ye bounteous ones.

i. 8. 4. a To 4 Agni Anikavant he offers a cake on eight potsherds as the sun rises, an oblation to the Maruts as the heaters at midday, and to the Maruts as lords of the house he milks at evening an oblation of all (the cows).

1 VS. has praghasino.

* This is RV. i. 173. 12 with variants; RV. has átra after indra and derail; KS, has deedly, and both KS, and MS, have dira; VS. agrees throughout with RV. In Pada b RV. has ásti hi smű followed by VS.; in a the RV. version is making aid prinya, MS. has maki cid prisya, while KS. repeats arough, no doubt in error. The sense is by no means certain, but the first Pada must contain a deprecation of Indra's anger, and the second says that there is expiation; in c the sense of the TS. version may be that there is much gain for an offering to Indra the generous, or possibly belonging to the generous donor at the sacrifice; the same sense can be extracted from the RV, and VS. version. Whitney on AV, iii. 35. 1 holds that groudly, which Shankar Pandit restores in the Pada text there, is as good as grayd read here in both texts, as the root is certainly yd in either case: so Oldenberg, Rgreda-Notes, i. 165, rejecting Arnold's suggestion (Vedic Metre, p. 101) acception. VS. also has the Visarga, and Weber (Ind. Stud. xiii. 96) ascribes to error its omission here. The Pada text in iii. 2. 8f also omits it, but not in iv. 6. 8 e, where he recognizes the compound.

indrijé is no doubt intended as a foil to sabháyám, 'in full assembly'. The verse occurs also in a form closely approximating to this in KS. xxxviii. 5; VS. xx. 17, the parallel versions in this place being briefer. The only uncertain point is Pada c, where the sense is possibly a reference to a breach of the rule affecting any individual. The verse is, of course, a general penitential formula, where vayom is natural, though, as used, the husband and wife alone say it: KS. has api for dahi.

* Cf. KS. ix. 5; KapS. viii. 8; MS. i. 10. 1, 2; VS. iii. 49, 50. For the Brahmana see TB. i. 6. 6, 7; CB. ii. 5. 3. 2-4. 10. b O ladle, fly away filled, And well filled do thou fly back; Like wares, O Çatakratu, Let us barter food and strength.

c Give thou to me; I shall give to thee; Bestow upon me; I shall bestow upon thee; Accept my offering; I shall accept thy offering [1].¹

d To the Maruts, the playful, he offers a cake on seven potsherds at the rising of the sun; he offers to Agni on eight potsherds, an oblation  to Soma, to Savitr on twelve potsherds, to Sarasvatī an oblation, to Pūṣan an oblation, to Indra and Agni on eleven potsherds, to Indra an oblation, to Viçvakarman on eleven potsherds.

i. 8. 5. a He³ offers to Soma with the Pitrs a cake on six potsherds, to the Pitrs who sit on the straw fried grains, for the Pitrs prepared by Agni he milks a beverage from a cow which has to be won over 4 (to another calf).

b This for thee, O father, and for thy line;
This for thee, O grandfather, great-grandfather, and for thy line;
Do ye Pitrs rejoice in your portions.

c May we gladden thee,

This section deals with the Sākamedha, the third of the Cāturmāsya rites. There are two days; the first is spent on the offerings given in a; the Mantras accompany the offering in the Gārhapatya of scrapings, in response to the roaring of a bull which is incited to do so, doubtless to show its readiness for the offering; the rest of the section deals with the second day of the rite; see BÇS. xii. 3; v. 10; ApÇS. viii. 11. 19-21; MÇS. i. 7, 5. 29; KÇS. v. 6. 2-7. 10; Hillebrandt, Rituallitteratur, pp. 117, 118; Oldenberg, Religion des Veda, pp. 76, 565.

This is the classic statement of the gift theory of sacrifice. niAdram is taken by the comm. as a gerund, and the accent no doubt favours this view (Whitney, Sanak, Gramm. § 1148), but the sense is much better if the nominal case in accepted.

I have so rendered coni throughout; Eggeling uses 'pap' as the equivalent, and that term is fairly descriptive of its nature as a mess of cooked grain of some sort ; cf. Vedic Index, L. 256.

3 Cf. KS. ix. 6; KapS. viii. 8, 9; MS. i. 10, 3; VS. iii. 51-55. For the Brahmana see TB. i. 6. 8, 9; CB. ii. 6, 1, 38, 39. This section deals with the Pitryajna which forms part of the Sakamedha; with Mantra b the priest offers in the east, south, and west corners of the fire altar for the Pitrs, father, grandfather, and great-grandfather, balls composed of the remains of the oblations kneaded into form; with a the performers go north and revere the Ahavaniya; with d the Garhapatya; with e the Anvaharyapacana; with / the Pitrs are dismissed; with g-i they pay reverence, and with k the sacrificer with his wife reveres the Garhapatya: cf. BCS. xil. 8; v. 11-15; ApCS. viii. 16. 5-14; i. 10. 5, 7, 9; MCS. i. 7, 6; KCS, v. 9, 21, 22; ACS, ii. 7, 8; QCS. iii. 17. 2-4; LQS. v. 2. 10, 11; Hillebrandt, Rituallitteratur, p. 118; Oldenberg, Religion des Veda, p. 442.

May Agni of the house free me from this sin;

May he make me blameless

In respect of all the ill we have wrought."

This is RV, 1, 82, 3, which has candisimini and yahi.

This is RV. 1. S2. 2, without variant. The only doubtful point is an—adhasata, which the comm. takes as governing prival, ('bodies'); Oldenberg (Roseda-Notes, i. 83) thinks that 'gifts' is meant, for of course here the application to the Pitra is clearly a secondary one; he takes vipra as a fem., and asternta as pass., which is probable enough: in his view wifa is not an imper. of paj, but a subjunct. of the singer, 'I shall yoke', but this is hardly necessary.

This verse is mutilated in metre: clearly the full form is paretana pitarah somyasah. as the other texts read; in b similarly gambhīrēbhih should be accepted from KS. and MS.; KS. has pūrwinebhih; AV. xviil.

4. 63 d has pūrydņaih with gambhīraih.
Pādas a and d are RV. x. 14. 10, which has ūpehi.

 This is RV. x. 57. S, without variant. The use here of that verse is clearly secondary.

5 This is RV. x. 57. 4, which has a, as is rendered necessary by the sense there.

For the Brahmana see TB. i. 6. 10; CB. ii. 6, 2, 4-17, This section deals with the offering of a cake to Tryambaka, a form of Rudra; with Mantra b the offering of each cake is accompanied, to the number of those in the household; with the cakes are deposited in a woven basket (mata) after being placed within the Vedi; with da brand is taken from the southern fire; with s a cake is thrown down on a mole heap; with f. after going north-west, offering is made, at a place where four ways meet, from the cake's upper edge with a Palaça leaf; with g and h the fire at the cross-ways made from the ember is besprinkled, the sacrificer uttering A; with i the fire is thrice circumambulated by the wives of the sacrificers; then the cakes are tied up in one or more baskets and fastened to

- Probably in view of Ambika above this is addressed to Amba; Tryambaka evidently is taken by the authors of the Mantras to refer to three wives or sisters or perhaps rather 'mother'; cf. Macdonell, Vedic Mythelogy, p. 74.
- Boyer (Journal Asiatique, 1901, il. 451 $7.) considers that ampla in many places denotes merely length of life on earth, not immortality in heaven. Either sense would suit here adequately.

i. 8. 7. a (He¹ offers) to Indra and Agni on twelve potsherds, an oblation to the All-gods, a cake on twelve potsherds to Indra Çunāsīra,² milk to Vāyu, to Sūrya on one potsherd; the sacrificial fee is a plough for twelve oxen.

b To Agni he offers on eight potsherds, to Rudra an oblation of Gavīdhukā,³ to Indra curds, to Varuņa an oblation made of barley; the sacrificial fee is a cow for draught purposes.

c The gods that sit in the east, led by Agni; that sit in the south, led by Yama; that sit in the west, led by Savitr; that sit in the north, led by Varuna; that sit above, led by Brhaspati; that slay the Raksases; may they protect us, may they help us; to them homage; to them hail! [1]

d The Raksases are collected, the Raksases are burnt up; here do c To Agni, slayer of Raksases, hail! To Yama, Savitr, Varuna, Brhaspati, the worshipful, the slayer of Raksases, hail!

f The sacrificial fee is a chariot with three horses.4

- ² Cunasira are Vayu plus Aditya in the view of the comm. Probably the ploughshare and the plough are really meant; see Macdonell, Vedic Mythology, p. 155. The form as an adjective Dyandva is not early; see Macdonell, Ved. Gramm. p. 158; Wackernagel, Altind. Gramm. II. i. 170 seq.

three potsherds; the sacrificial fee is a dwarf beast of burden. To Soma and Püşan he offers an oblation, to Indra and Püşan an oblation, to Püşan an oblation; the sacrificial fee is a dark (animal). i. 8. 9. To 1 Brhaspati he offers an oblation in the house of the Brahman 2 (priest); the sacrificial fee is a white-backed (animal). (He offers) to Indra on eleven potsherds in the house of a Rajanya; the sacrificial fee is a bull. To Aditya (he offers) an oblation in the house of the chief wife; the sacrificial fee is a cow. Of. KS. xv. 4, 5; MS. ii. 6, 5, 6. For the Brihmana see TB. i. 7, 3; CB. v. 3, 1, 1-2, 8. This section gives the efferings made in the houses of the Ratnins of the king; cf. BCS. xii. 5, 6; ApCS. xviii. 10, 12-11, 23; MCS. ix. 1, 1; RCS. xv. 3, 1-46. These are followed by two sacrifices to Indra in the house of the sacrificer; then as part of the Diksa or consecration comes the offering to Mitra and Brhaspati.

² The Gramani here is presumably the Gramani of the royal city and hence is honoured by inclusion in the list of Ratnins; see Eggeling, op. cil. 60, n. I. This is more probable than any attempt to make him into an officer over a number of villages like the later officers, for whom see Foy, Dis königliche Genealt, p. 74.

According to Sayana he is the 'chamberlain', and this is possible; cf. Vedic Index, i. 203.

^{6 &#}x27;Charioteer' is certainly meant; see Eggeling, op. cit. 62, n. 1.

This is referred by Sayana to the collector of the king's sixth share (cf. largudges in Arist. Ath. Pol. 2); cf. Vedic Index, ii, 100.

May the king, the slayer of Vrtra, Be our king and slay the fee.

There is (an offering) to Mitra and Brhaspati; in the milk of a white (cow) with a white calf which has curdled itself, and in butter which has churned itself, in a dish of Açvattha wood [2] with four corners (made) of a branch which has fallen of itself, he should scatter husked and unhusked rice grains; the husked ones in the milk are Brhaspati's, the unhusked in the butter are Mitra's; the Vedi must be self-made, the strew self-cut, the kindling-stick self-made; the sacrificial fee is the white (cow) with a white calf.

i. 8. 10. a To ² Agni, lord of the house, he offers a cake of black rice on eight potsherds; to Soma, lord of the forest, an oblation of millet; to Savitr, of true instigation, a cake of swift-growing ³ rice on twelve potsherds; to Rudra, lord of cattle, an oblation of Gavidhukā; to Brhaspati, lord of speech, an oblation of wild rice; to Indra, the noblest, a cake of large rice on eleven potsherds; to Mitra, the true, an oblation of Amba grain, and to Varuṇa, lord of right, an oblation made of barley.

b May Savitr of instigations instigate thee, Agni of lords of the house, Soma of lords of the forest, Rudra of cattle [1], Brhaspati of speech, Indra of nobles, Mitra of truth, Varuna of lords of right.

c O ye gods that instigate the gods, do ye instigate him, descendant of N. N., to freedom from foes, to great lordship, to great overlordship, to great rule over the people.

d This is your king, O Bharatas; Soma is the king of us Brahmans.

There is a different version in Ap. according to which only half is self-made, i.e. natural, and this seems more logical: it is the view of the KS.

2 Cf. KS. xv. 5, 8; MS. ii. 6, 6, 12; VS. ix. 39, 40. For the Brahmana see TB. i. 7, 4; CB. v. 3, 3, 3-12. This section gives the so-called Devasū oblations (see iii. 4, 11); then the Brahman priest, before the oblation to Svistakrt, takes the sacrificer by the hand with Mantras b and c, and presents him to the Ratnins with d, adding the second portion of it in an undertone; the sacrificer wipes his face with s and f, and steps three paces eastwards with g; see ApCS, xviii. 12, 1-10; KCS. xv. 4, 6-17; MCS. ix. 1, 3; BCS. x. 55, 56 (in the Agni ritual).

For this ÇB, v. 3. 3. 2 has plāņuka and uses thid. 3 don for the 'black rice' of TS. It also has hayana for makderihi, and names for ambd. The gen. crikindm is one of material, and shows that Whitney, Sansk. Gramm. § 295, rather over-estimates the rarity of the usage. Speijer, Vedische und Sanskrit Syntax, § 63, does not recognize any limitation of the use; in Sanskrit Syntax, § 113, he says it is not common in the classical language; it is quite frequent in the Sütras, especially Baudhäyans.

 The genitives here are doubtless partitive, and not dependent on a remittena understood.

decast is presumably 'instigating the gods', and not 'divine instigators'.

Ap. gives alternatives for Kurus, Pañcalas, Kuru-Pancalas, and other kings where e This kingdom hath verily been conferred, Varuna hath diffused his own body; We have become obedient to pure Mitra; We have magnified the name of the great holy order.

f These have become all the hosts of Varuna, janată îs given, apparently în error for janate; cf. eșa te janate în MÇS. ix. 1. 3. It îs remarkable that the comm. should not recognize the name as a tribal name, but with this may be compared the complete ignoring by the comm. on CU. iv. 17. 9 of the name of the Kurus, an error followed in his trans. even by Böhtlingk. Baudh, has ami, only one MS. having Bharatah, which is significant of date and change of outlook.

¹ To e and f VS. has no parallel; assess is read in KS. and MS. and mahad.

MS. has abhūma; KS. and MS. have ni mitrayir arufin, and agagubhanta; KS. has ni triti no and MS ni triti. The verses are doubtless deliberately obscure and pompous.

This occurs above in i. 7. 7 g.

CL KS. xv. 6; MS. II. 6. 8; VS. x. I-4. For the Brahmana see TB. i. 7. 5; CB. v. 3. 4. 1-20. This section gives the Mantras for the drawing of the waters for the consecration; with a, first part, he offers in waters of the Sarasvatī and then draws the water, with the next he takes waters which come from the ocean or Indus, or other river with a male name (pumnada), then waters which flow up stream, waters which flow down stream, waters in a tank, waters which go up stream or from hail (hraduninam), the rain-waters in the heat of the sun, waters which refleet forms, stagmant waters, waters from hearfrost (prusea), waters of the caul of a cow, waters of milk, of curds, of ghee, of honey; b serves as an addition either to the offering or the taking of the several sots of waters, and the first part of e (ending with sides) applies to the offering, the second to the taking; see ApCS. xviii. 12, 12-13, 20, who gives also prohistori atha and pariedhini stho, stated to refer to waters which flowing forth then dry up, and to waters parinadinam : and cf. BCS. xii. 8; KCS. xv. 4. 21-44. It is noteworthy that the waters are those of the Sarasvati, which well accords with the place of the Kuru-Pancala-Bharatas (i. 8. 10 d); see Vedic Index, i. 169 seq.

This section deals with the preparation of the water of the consecration ; with a he deposits the waters drawn in i. 8. 11 in a vessel (sata), and with b places it between the Hotr's altar and that of the Brahmanacchansin; with c he places a piece of gold in the vessel, and with a he purifies the waters with the gold piece; with s he takes them off in four vessels of Palaça, Udumbara, Açvattha, and Nyagrodha wood; with f the sacrificer done first a silken garment (farpya), and then a yellow turban (usulsa); with g he is made to announce himself; with a the Brahman priest presents him to the people, adding the reservation in an undertone; with a bow, and with k three arrows are handed to the sacrificer, and l is pronounced over the arrows as they are given; m is said by the sacrificer as he stretches his arms out whether to seize the arrows and shoot, as the comm. here, or merely generally as Baudh.; see BÇS. xii. 8, 9; ApÇS. xviii. 13, 21-14, 17; KS. xv. 4, 46-5, 21, 28, 33.

2 KS. has rajardyah as in i. S. 11 b.

This verse is variously read: KS. has dynamyd and skd and anddhryta apasyo (an obvious blunder for apasyoro in view of resimal, following); MS. agrees but also has drid, while CB. has dpal, making the sense clear. drid, may be a nom, but it seems better to take it as an acc with residual. VS. has residual, which is also read in KS. and MS., but the sing, is clearly correct.

This is a variant of RV. v. 62. 8, which has hirangurulpam upiso vyintan dycuthinam vidits and robatho with dtag cakpathe; KS. and MS. have the singular in Padas a and b with the reading of RV. but with hiranguraryam and uiditan, the later form; but have cakrathe, but KS. also has hitra for titus of MS.; VS. differs considerably, hiranguraryal upiso cirole is followed by a new Pada b: ubhde indra iid ithah siryagea; the rest agrees with TS. For Ditief, Macdonell, Vedic Mythology, p. 123.

These Mantras are used in the ceremony by which the sacrificer figuratively mounts all the quarters (a-e); f and g belong to the Mantras for the making of the offering of a cake on twenty-one potsherds to the Maruts; f and g give fourteen names and seven more occur in TA. iv. 24.1; A gives two sets of six offerings each, one set before and one after the consecration itself, and i gives two sets of six offerings to appease demons (bhattanam acceptages), one before and one after the consecration; see Ap. xviii. 14. 17; 15. 1, 2 (where the Marut offering (and curds for the Allgods) is given as optional here instead of, as at xviii. 12. 11, 12, after the rite in i. 8. 10 g), 8, 9; 16. 11, 12; and cf. Presumably these are names of the Maruts as the comm. says, and they occur in TS. iv. 6. 5. c and p and in the other Sanhitas in a totally different place, in the midst of offerings to the fire after the Catarudriya.

For the form, cf. Speijer, ZDMG. lxv. 316. * Cf. KS. xv. 7; MS. ii. 6, 10, 11; VS. x. 10, 14-20. For the Brahmana see TB. L.7.8; CB. v. 4, 1. 1-2, 10. This section gives the Mantras for the actual besprinkling; with a a tiger's skin is deposited in front of the Pracastr's altar; with b a piece of gold is placed on it; and with e placed on the head of the sacrificer; with d the sacrificer with his right foot flings a piece of lead at a cunuch, and with a piece of copper (lohitāyasa) at the keçavāpa; with f he is addressed, and with g he is solemnly besprinkled by the Adhvaryu in front with Palaça, by a Rajanya or the Brahman priest on the right, by a Vaiçya at the back, and on the left by a relative (janya); he is addressed in the process with A, after the sprinkling he loosens his wet garments and deposits them on the Utkara with i, while with k the drops scattered in the sprinkling are mopped up; the remains of the offering are used for an oblation to Rudra; I accompanies an offering of the scrapings of the consecration waters which is performed at the house of a favourite son, while he and the chief wife touch the sacrificer; see ApÇS. xviii, 15.5-16. 16; and cf. didyot cannot be construed, and must be an error for didyor unless it is to be altered to didicas of MS. VS. xx. 2 has vidyot, which is equally impossible. Roth in PW. suggests that both words are based on mytyoh; Wober (Ind. Stud. xiii. 101) thinks vidyot is a blunder for didyot.

5 'Serpents' is the version of the comm. This instance is a clear case of the danger of seeing worship of flies in mere rites designed to remove them from the sacrifice.

The legend of Namuci is considered in connexion with the ritual by Bloomfield, JAOS. xv. 143 seq.; Macdonell, Vedic Mythology, p. 162. In ApCS. xviii. 5. 6 pandakēya is read by Garbe: in the comm. here it is made into sandakāya.

As early as TB. dieas is misunderstood to mean aly anyan, which is quite impossible.

This is a clear case of the absurd application of a verse; KS. and MS. read aid aidib, and iyamanab, and end of yanti susice na ranta, while MS. has prathat: VS. has and riyamanab and pra with prathat.

krigi (krigi in Pada) is read by KS. and VS. as kriei, by VSK. as kraei, by MS. as giri, while MS. and VS. have tismin, which VSK. rejects for tismoi. The sense is doubtful: if it is taken as krayin the accent is wrong (the exceptions are negligible; see Macdonell, Vel. Gramm. p. 87), and it seems to be suggested by the parallels, that the short i is correct. kriei is of course found in RV. ii. 17. 6; 22, 2, and elsewhere, where Sayana takes it as the name of an Asura, while kraei might be a form of kraeis, 'raw flesh'.

* This is a very common verse, identical with RV. x. 121, 10.

¹ This is a mystic verse from RV. iv. 40. 5. The comm. applies all of it to the chariot and makes it mean 'the chariot produces the Rājasūya'! The verse is repeated in full at iv. 2. 1 ».

* Cf. KS. xv. 8; MS. ii. 6, 12; VS. x. 26-28. For the Brahmana see TB. i. 7, 10; CB. v. 4. 4. 4-19. This section gives the Mantras for the adoration of the king; with a he drops down his right and left hand in turn which he has raised with i. S. 12 m; with 5 he puts the hands in the clotted curds for the All-gods; c is addressed to the garment of skin, which is deposited on the throne (dsandi) with the Mantra d (though the comm. makes this to be addressed to the sacrificer's body, and it would seem natural to put the verse into the mouth of a priest as addressed to the king); with e the sacrificer takes his place on the throne; f is pronounced when he is seated; then all the priests, Adhvaryu in front, Brahman to north, Hotr to south, Udgatr to west, surround the king and the dialogue in g is exchanged; with h the Brahman hands the king the wooden sword, which he hands to his dear friend or son, he to the Purchita, and he to the Ratnins, until it comes to the Aksāvāpa, who plays a symbolic game, ending with the gift to the king of five dice with i; k is addressed by the king in turn to the Samgrahitr, the Bhagadugha, and the Kattr, and k accompanies three oblations, one in water, one in a tree-trunk (sthanu) or an antheap, and one in the Garhapatya: between i and & intervene important events, the tale of Çunahçepa is told and gifts presented to the Hotr and others; the offering on twenty-one potsherds to the Maruta and the clotted curds for the All-gods are offered, and the concluding bath takes place; see ApCS. xviii. 18. 1-20. 4; and cf. BCS, xii. 14, 15; MCS, ix. 1. 4; KCS. xv. 7, 1-12. PRAPĀŢHAKA I ii. 1. 1. He 1 who desires prosperity should offer a white (beast) to Vāyu; Vayu is the swiftest deity; verily he has recourse to him with his own share; verily he makes him attain prosperity; he prospers. 'He is an overswift deity, they say, 'be has power to burn him up.' This (beast) he should offer to Vayu of the team; the team is his support; verily, being supported he attains prosperity to avoid being burnt; he prospers [1]. He who desires a village 2 should offer to Vayu of the team; Vayu leads these creatures tied by the nose; verily he has recourse to Vayu of the team with his own share; verily he assigns him creatures led by the nose; he becomes possessed of a village. It is offered to (Vayu) of the team; verily he makes creatures abide steadfast with him. He who desires offspring should offer to Vayu of the team; Vayu is expiration, the team is inspiration; expiration and inspiration depart from the offspring of him [2] who being fit for offspring yet obtains not offspring. Verily he has recourse to Vayu of the team with his own share; verily he for him begets offspring by means of expiration and inspiration; he obtains offspring. He who has long been ill should offer to Vāyu of the team; Vāyu is expiration, the team is inspiration, expiration and inspiration depart from him whose illness is long. Verily he has recourse to Vayu of the team with his own share [3], he bestows on him expiration and inspiration; even if his life be gone, he yet lives. Prajapati was here alone;

² Cf. KS. xii. 13; xiii. 1; MS. ii. 5. 1. This chapter begins a series (ii. 1. I-10) of Kamyeştis of all sorts, based on the ritual of the Agnisomiya beast, which is assumed, and only the variants with their grounds are given. ApÇS. xix. 16, 17 briefly runs through the list, and it is dealt with in detail in TB. ii. 8. 1. 1-6 corresponding to TS. ii. 1. 1.

3 The essence of the possession of a Grama is not ownership of land according to the text but subordination, which well accords with the theory that the royal grant of a village was one not of ownership but of political superiority and the receipt of dues. It is also possible that the simple process of becoming the chief of a village by one's own exertions is contemplated. Cf. also ii. 1. 3. 2; Vedic Index, i. 246, 247; ii. 214, 215, 254-256.

he desired, 'May I create offspring and cattle'; he took out from his body the omentum, and placed it in the fire. The hornless goat then came to life; he offered it to its own deity; then did he create offspring and cattle. He who desires offspring [4] and cattle should offer to Prajapati a hornless goat. Verily he has recourse to Prajāpati with his own share; verily he begets for him offspring and cattle. The beard 1 is the characteristic of man, the lack of horns of the horse, having incisors on one side only that of cattle, having sheep-like hooves that of sheep, the goat-nature that of goats; so many are the domesticated animals; verily by their characteristics he wins them [5]. He who desires cattle should offer one of a triplet to Soma and Pūṣan; the she-goat has two teats, two are born separately,2 the third for strength and growth. Verily he has recourse to Soma and Pusan with their own share; verily they produce cattle for him; Soma is the depositor of seed, Püşan the producer of cattle; Soma deposits seeds for him, Püşan produces cattle. The sacrificial post is of Udumbara; the Udumbara is strength, cattle are strength; verily by strength he wins for him strength and cattle. ii. 1. 2. Prajapati a created offspring; they being created went away from him; they went to Varuna; he pursued them and asked them back; he would not give them back to him; he said, 'Choose a boon, and then give them back to me.' He chose a boon from them, it was the black (beast) with one white foot. He who is seized by Varuna should offer this black (beast) with one white foot to Varuna. Verily he has recourse to Varuna [1] with his own share; verily he sets him free from Varuna's noose. It is a black (beast) with one white hoof, for it has Varuna for its deity (and serves) for prosperity. Svarbhanu, the Asura, pierced the sun with darkness; the gods desired an atonement for him; the first darkness of his they struck off became a black sheep; the second a bright-coloured one; the third a white one; what they cut from the upper part of the bone became a barren ewe[2]. The gods said, 'Here has come into being a divine beast; to whom shall we offer him?' Now then the earth was small, plants were not born; they offered the barren ewe to the Adityas as desire.5 Then the earth became broad, the plants grew. He who desires, 'May I be extended with cattle, with offspring be propagated' should offer this barren ewe to the Adityas as desire [3]. Verily he has recourse to the Adityas as desire1 with their own share; verily they extend him with cattle and propagate him with offspring. Yonder sun did not shine; the gods desired an atonement for him; for him they offered these dewlapped (beasts), to Agni one with a black neck, to Indra one of different colours, to Brhaspati a white one; verily by means of them they restored his brilliance. For him who desires splendour he should offer dewlapped (beasts) [4], to Agni one with a black neck, to Indra one of different colours, to Brhaspati a white one. Verily he has recourse to these deities with their own share; verily they bestow splendour upon him; he becomes resplendent. In the spring 2 in the morning should he offer (the beast) with a black neck to Agni; in the summer at midday (the beast) of different colours to Indra; in the autumn in the afternoon the white (beast) to Brhaspati. These are the brilliances of the sun, in the spring in the morning, in the summer at midday, in the autumn in the afternoon; verily he wins whatever brilliances there are [5]. They are offered in the course of the year; the year is the giver of splendour; verily the year gives him splendour; he becomes resplendent. They are (beasts) with young; the foetus is power; verily he bestows power upon him. He who being master of uttering speech cannot speak properly should offer a ewe to Sarasvati; Sarasvati is speech; verily he has recourse to Sarasvatī with her own share, she bestows on him [6] speech, and he becomes an utterer of speech. Its teeth are complete; therefore men utter speech whole.3 He who is long ill should offer to Agni (a beast) with black neck, and a brown (beast) to Soma; the body of him whose illness is long goes to Agni, the sap to Soma; verily he ransoms from Agni his body, from Soma his sap, and even if his life is gone, yet he lives. He who desires offspring should offer to Soma a brown (beast), and to Agni one with a black neck; Soma [7] is the depositor of seed, Agni the producer of offspring; verily Soma deposits seed for him, Agni produces offspring; he obtains offspring. The Brahman who despite study does not win fame should offer to Agni (a beast) with a black neck, and to Soma a brown (one); in that (the beast) is offered to Agni, thereby he places brilliance in him; in that (the beast) is offered to Soma, thereby (he places) splendour. The one with a black neck is for Agni; verily he drives away the darkness from him: it is white [8]; verily he bestows brilliance on him. There is a brown one for Soma; verily

² This is not very clear, but the idea seems to be that the birth of a third is a sign of strength of the mother which makes the third a good offering; nond almost has the sense of 'normally', perhaps 'apart' from what is out of the usual, unless indeed the idea is that two are born together, the third a moment later: the

he bestows splendour and radiance on him. He who has a dispute for a Purohitaship should offer (a beast) with a black neck to Agni, a brown one to Soma, and one with a black neck to Agni; the Brahman is connected with Agni, the prince with Soma; on either side of (the beast) for Soma there is one for Agni; verily with brilliance, with the Brahman, he seizes on either side the kingdom and forthwith appropriates it; they choose him as Purchita. ii. 1, 3. The gods and the Asuras strove for these worlds; Visnu saw this dwarf,2 he offered it to its own deity; then he conquered these worlds. One who is engaged in a struggle should offer a dwarf (beast) to Visnu; then he becomes Visnu and conquers these worlds. He should offer on an uneven (place), for these worlds are uneven as it were; (verily it serves) for prosperity. He who is engaged in a contest should offer (a beast) with a spot on its forehead and horns bent forward to Indra, the angry, the wise [1]. By power (indriyá), by anger, by wisdom, one wins a contest. Verily he has recourse to Indra, the angry, the wise, with his own share; verily he bestows on him power, anger, wisdom; he wins that contest. He who desires a village should offer (a beast) with dappled thighs to Indra with the Maruts. Verily he has recourse to Indra with the Maruts with his own share; verily he subdues his relatives3 to him; he becomes possessed of a village. In that it is an ox [2]. it is Indra's; in that it is dappled, it is of the Maruts, for prosperity. It has dappled thighs behind; verily he makes the folk dependent on him. He who desires food should offer a brown (beast) to Soma; food is connected with Soma; verily he has recourse to Soma with his own share; he bestows food on him; verily he becomes an eater of food. It is brown; that is the colour of food; (verily it serves) for prosperity. He who being meet for kingship obtains not a kingdom should offer a brown (beast) to Soma [3]; the kingdom is connected with Soma; verily he has recourse to Soma with his own share; Soma bestows on him a kingdom; the kingdom comes to him. It is brown, that is the colour of Soma; (verily it serves) for prosperity. He whose prosperity is gone and who desires support should offer (a beast) with a spot on the forehead and horns bent forward to Indra, the conqueror of Vrtra; verily he overcomes the evil foe and attains support. He who is seized by evil should offer (a beast) with a spot on the forehead and horns bent forward to Indra, the overcomer of enemies [4]; the enemy is the evil; verily he has recourse to Indra, the overcomer of enemies with his

He who being meet for kingship obtains not a kingdom should offer (a beast) with a spot on the forehead and horns bent forward to Indra of the thunderbolt. Verily he has recourse to Indra of the thunderbolt with his own share; he bestows his thunderbolt on him, the bolt kindles him for prosperity, the kingdom comes to him. It has a spot on its forehead and horns bent forward, that is the shape of the bolt, (and so it serves) for prosperity.

ii. 1. 4. Yonder1 sun did not shine;2 the gods desired an atonement for him; for him they offered this offering of ten bulls; verily thereby they restored his brilliance. For him who desires splendour he should offer this offering of ten bulls; verily he has recourse to yonder sun with his own share; verily he bestows on him splendour; he becomes resplendent. He should offer in the spring in the morning three with spots on the forehead; in the summer at midday [1] three with white backs; in the autumn in the afternoon three with white tails. Three are the brilliances of the sun, in the spring in the morning; in the summer at midday; in the autumn in the afternoon; verily he wins whatever brilliances there are. They are offered in sets of three; verily in order he bestows brilliance on him. They are offered in the course of the year; the year is the giver of splendour; verily the year gives him splendour; he becomes resplendent. At the end of the year he should offer a reddishbrown one to Prajāpati [2]; all the gods are Prajāpati; verily he rests on all the gods. If he fears, 'I shall become diseased in the skin,' he should offer a dark (beast) to Soma and Püşan; man has Soma as his deity, cattle have Pusan; verily by his own deity, by cattle, he makes a skin for him; he does not become diseased in the skin. The gods and Yama were at strife over this world; Yama appropriated (ayuvata) the power and strength of the gods; therefore Yama has his name [3]. The gods reflected, 'Yama here has become what we are.' They had recourse to Prajapati. Prajapati from his body fashioned out the bull and the cow; the gods offered a cow to Visnu and to Varuna, a bull to Indra; they caused him to be seized by Varuna and by Visnu, the sacrifice, they drove him away; his power they appropriated by means of that for Indra. He who has foes should in strife offer to Visnu and Varuna a cow [4], to Indra a bull; verily causing his foe to be seized by Varuna, by Visnu, the sacrifice, he drives him away, he appropriates his power by means of that for Indra, he prospers, his foe is defeated. Indra slew Vrtra; him Vrtra slain bound with sixteen coils; from the head of Vrtra came out cows, they were (cows) of Videha;1 behind them came the bull. It Indra [5] perceived; he reflected, 'He who shall offer him shall be freed from this evil'; he offered to Agni one with a black neck, to Indra a bull. Agni, being approached with his own share, burned into sixteen pieces the coils of Vrtra, and by (the offering) to Indra he bestowed power on himself. He who is seized by evil should offer (a beast) with a black neck to Agni, and a bull to Indra; verily Agni, being approached with his own share [6], burns away his evil, and by (the offering) to Indra he bestows power on himself, he is freed from the evil, he prospers. He who is long in exile should offer a cow to sky and earth; for he is not established in them; verily also he who is long in exile has recourse to sky and earth with their own share; verily they establish them; he is established. It is one which is long in labour, for long in labour as it were is the kingdom of him who is long in exile; (verily it serves) for prosperity. To Vayu [7] he should offer a calf; Vayu is their calf; these worlds are barren to him, the people are barren; verily also he who is long in exile has recourse to Vayu with his own share; verily Vayu causes these worlds and the people to give to him; these worlds drop milk 3 for him; the people wait upon him in service. ii. 1. 5. Indra opened the hole of Vrtra; the topmost cattle he grasped by the back and pulled out; 5 a thousand cattle followed it, it became humpbacked. He who desires cattle should offer this humpbacked (one) to Indra; verily he has recourse to Indra with his own share; verily he bestows cattle upon him; he becomes possessed of cattle. It is humpbacked [1]; the humpbacked is fortune a thousandfold; verily by fortune he wins cattle. When he obtains a thousand cattle, he should offer a dwarf (beast) to Visnu; upon it the thousand rested; therefore the dwarf, stretched out, affords support to cattle when born. 'Who can obtain a thousand cattle?' they say; verily he should make up a thousand days and nights and sacrifice.6 The days and nights [2] are cattle; verily he gives support to cattle when born. He who desires offspring should offer a barren cow to the plants; the plants

² The metaphor is clearly from a cow which is long in labour, and is therefore without milk. The form dapayati below has its true causal sense and is not equivalent to an ordinary verb.

This sense of mu suits admirably the context. The variants sturenti (A, B), arstanti (C), anseanti (D) are all easy cor-ruptions of a rare expression : Sayana has prasriteayanti.

For akkhidat, as the ed. correctly reads, see Whitney on TPr. xiv. 8; Macdonell, Ved. Gramm. § 30; below vi. 6, 11, 1.

The sense is slightly obscure: apparently he is to wait a thousand days and nights and then offer the ramana in place of an offering of a thousand cattle.

spring; the plants indeed destroy the pregnancy of that one which becomes barren, verily he has recourse to the plants with their own share; verily they from his own self1 beget him offspring; he obtains offspring [3]. The plants are the waters, man is what is not; verily the waters give him being from non-existence; therefore they say, both he who knows thus and who (knows) not, 'The waters verily give being from non-existence.' He who desires prosperity should offer to Indra (acow) which is barren after one birth; he is unborn who being fit for prosperity obtains it not; the (cow) became barren after bearing Indra 2 [4]; verily he has recourse to Indra with his own share; verily he causes him to attain prosperity; he prospers. He should offer to Indra (the calf) through bearing which (the cow) became barren; that indeed is power (indriyá); verily straightway he obtains power. He whose ancestors and himself for three generations 3 have not drunk Soma should offer (a bull) which has again been let loose to Indra and Agai; the Soma drinking of a Brahman is interrupted if his ancestors and himself for three generations have not drunk Soma[5]; verily he has recourse to Indra and Agni with their own share; verily they bestow on him the drinking of Soma, the drinking of Soma comes to him. In that it is offered to Indra, the Somadrink is power; verily he wins power, the Soma-drink. In that it is offered to Agni, the Brahman is connected with Agni, verily he continues his own deity. It is let loose again, for his drinking of Soma is as it were let loose again [6]; (verily it serves) for prosperity. When practising witchcraft, he should offer a hornless (beast) to Brahmanaspati ; verily he has recourse to Brahmanaspati with his own share; verily he cuts him down to him; 4 swiftly he reaches destruction. It is a hornless one; prosperity is razor-edged; in that it is hornless, (it serves) for prosperity. The sacrificial post is shaped like a wooden sword; the wooden sword is a thunderbolt; verily he hurls a thunderbolt against him; the strew is made of Cara grass; verily he crushes him; the kindling-wood is of Vibhīdaka; verily he splits him.

ii. 1. 6. He⁶ who desiring a village desires, 'May I be the back of my equals', should offer to Brhaspati (a beast) with a white back; verily he has recourse to Brhaspati with his own share; verily he makes him to be the back of his peers; he becomes possessed of a village. It is with a white back, for it has Brhaspati as its deity; (verily it serves) for prosperity. He who desires food should offer a dark (beast) to Pūṣan; Pūṣan is food; verily he has recourse

He who desires a village should offer to the All-gods (a beast) of many forms; his relatives are connected with the All-gods; verily he has recourse to the All-gods with their own share; verily they subdue his [4] relations to him; he becomes possessed of a village. It is of many forms, for it is connected with many deities; (verily it serves) for prosperity. He who is long ill from an unknown cause should offer to Prajapati (a beast) without horns; man is connected with Prajapati; Prajapati verily knows of him who is long ill from an unknown cause; verily he has recourse to Prajāpati with his own share; verily he releases him from this weariness. It is without horns, for it has Prajāpati as its deity; (verily it serves) for prosperity.

 Nor the east, O Ādityas, nor the west;
 Despite my feeble mind, O Vasus [5],
 Led by you, may I attain the light without fear.
- With the most recent help of the Adityas, With their most present succour, may we be united; May the mighty ones, hearkening, establish this sacrifice For release from sin, for freedom.
- v Hear my cry, O Varuṇa, And be merciful this day; Seeking for help I call on thee.
- W I implore this of thee, praising thee with my hymn;
 The sacrificer seeketh this with his offerings;
 Be here, not angry, O Varuna;
 O wide ruler, strike not away our life.

PRAPĀŢHAKA II

The Special Sacrifices

ii. 2. 1. Prajāpati¹ created offspring. On their creation Indra and Agni hid them away. Prajāpati reflected, 'Indra and Agni have hidden away from me offspring.' He then perceived this offering to Indra and Agni on eleven potsherds, and offered it, and the two (gods) restored offspring to him. Indra and Agni indeed conceal his offspring, who being fit for offspring, yet obtains not offspring; so let a man who desires offspring offer a sacrifice to Indra and Agni on eleven potsherds. Verily Indra and Agni [1] he has recourse to with their own share; verily they make manifest offspring to him, he obtains offspring.

He should make an offering to Indra and Agni on eleven potsherds who suggested sthū (stha) later withdrew the proposal.

has a dispute about a field1 or with his neighbours. Verily Indra and Agni he has recourse to with their own share, by means of them he overpowers the power and strength of his rival, he overcomes the evil foe.2 Now power and strength depart from him who advances to battle; 3 let him who is about to advance to battle offer to Indra and Agni an offering on eleven potsherds [2]. Verily Indra and Agni he has recourse to with their own share; verily they two place power and strength in him; with power and strength he approaches the battle and conquers in it. Now power and strength is he bereft of who wins a battle; let him who has won a battle make an offering to Indra and Agni on eleven potsherds. Verily Indra and Agni he has recourse to with their own share; verily they two place power and strength in him [3], he is not bereft of power and strength. Now power and strength depart from him who goes to the assembly; 4 let him who is about to go to the assembly make an offering to Indra and Agni on eleven potsherds. Verily Indra and Agni he has recourse to with their own share: verily they two place power and strength in him, with power and strength he goes to the assembly. Let him next offer an oblation to Pusan. Pusan is the giver of power and strength, verily Püşan [4] he has recourse to with his own share; verily he gives to him power and strength. When he has gone to the assembly, he should offer an oblation to Ksetrapati; Ksetrapati is this (earth); verily on this earth he takes firm root. Thereafter let him make the offering 5 to Indra and Agni on eleven potsherds; verily taking stand on this earth he next places power and strength in his body.

ii. 2. 2. To 6 Agni, maker of paths, he should offer a cake on eight potsherds who being a sacrificer at full and new moon passes over the offering either at the new or the full moon; he wanders from the path on a trackless way who being a sacrificer at new and full moon passes over the offering either at the new or the full moon; verily he has recourse to Agni with his own share; verily he leads him to the path from the trackless way. A draught ox is the sacrificial fee, for it is the drawer; (verily it serves) for prosperity.

This is not in either KS, or MS. It is a clear evidence of separate ownership of land; cf. Vedic Index, i. 210, 211.

² vi-jayate with the instrumental means according to Delbrück, Altind. Synt. p. 131, 'he fights victoriously with', just as yield has the constr. But paymand is adjectival, not a noun as Delbrück takes it: payman bhrütreya is a stock phrase in the Brahmanas.

The Indian tradition frankly recognizes the terror of warriors before the battle; cf. AV. iii. I with Bloomfield's notes, SBE. xlii. 325, 326. wise ii. 2. 6. 4, and of Delbrück, Altind. Synt. p. 167. 5 Le. the one janutim coyûn.

To Agni, lord of vows 1 [1] he should offer a cake on eight potsherds, who having established a sacred fire breaks his yow as it were; verily he has recourse to Agni, lord of vows, with his own share; verily he makes good his vow for him; he becomes a keeper of vows. He should offer at night [2], for at night the Raksases are active; verily he smites them when active; he should offer in (a place) which is closed in, to prevent the Raksases entering; the Yajya and the Anuvākyā are Raksas-slaying, to lay low the Raksases. To Agni with the Rudras he should offer a cake on eight potsherds when he practises witchcraft; Rudra is his dread form; verily he cuts him down to him; swiftly he reaches misfortune. He whose cows or men perish or who is afraid should offer to Agni, the fragrant, a cake on eight potsherds [3]; the fragrant is his healing form; verily by it he applies healing to him; it is offered to the fragrant, to smite away the fetid odour. When a battle is joined he should offer a cake on eight potsherds to Agni, the burnt; 3 verily by his own share he pacifies him and indicates his foes; whomsoever of those near (him) they pierce, he lives; whomsoever of the foe, he dies; he wins that battle [4]. He loves to frequent those whose oldest and youngest die continuously, for the human sacrifice is dearest to him; he should offer to Agni, the burnt, a cake on eight potsherds; verily with his own share he pacifies him, and none other of them dies before his day. He loves to frequent the house of him whose house he burns; he should offer a cake on eight potsherds to Agni, the burnt; verily he pacifies him with his own share, and he burns not his house again.

ii. 2. 3. He 4 who does not attain his desires should offer a cake on eight potsherds to Agni as desire; 5 verily he has recourse to Agni as desire with his own share; verily he unites him with his desire; his desire comes to him. He who has a dispute over a field or with his relatives should offer a cake on eight potsherds to Agni, the youngest; verily he has recourse to Agni, the pound raksokánam.

The verses i and m are of doubtful application: they can be taken as a substitute for i and k or for n and o, as they are neither clearly intended as relating to Agni, maker of paths, or Agni, lord of vows. Weber (Ind. Stud. xiii. 107) suggests, but only hesitatingly, that the root pat would here be more in place than pad.

There are three variant sacrifices for the last two verses (i. 3. 14 s and f).

⁴ Cf. KS. x. 7; MS, ii. 1. 11; BCS. xiii. 5. The verses are in i. 3. 14; g and a accompany the offering to Agni as desire; i and k accompany that for the youngest; l and m that for dyapmant; n and o that for Jatavedas; p and g that for the radiant; r and s that for the brilliant; i and u that for the strong.

youngest, with his own share; verily thereby he appropriates the power and strength of his foe [1]; he overcomes the evil foe. He against whom witchcraft is practised should offer a cake on eight potsherds to Agni, the youngest; verily he has recourse to Agni, the youngest, with his own share; verily he drives away the Raksases from him; he who practises witchcraft does not lay him low. He who desires, 'May I live all my days', should offer a cake on eight potsherds to Agni of life; verily he has recourse to Agni of life with his own share; verily he bestows life upon him [2]; he lives all his days. He who seeks to be strong should offer a cake on eight potsherds to Agni, the strong; verily he has recourse to Agni, the strong, with his own share; verily thereby he is strong who seeks to be strong.

ii. 2. 4. He¹ who desires, 'May I possess food', should offer to Agni, possessor of food, a cake on eight potsherds; verily he has recourse to Agni, possessor of food, with his own share; verily he makes him to possess food; he becomes a possessor of food. He who desires, 'May I be an eater of food', should offer a cake on eight potsherds to Agni, eater of food; verily he has recourse to Agni, eater of food, with his own share; verily he makes him an eater of food; he becomes² an eater of food [1]. He who desires, 'May I be a lord of food', should offer to Agni, lord of food, a cake on eight potsherds; verily he has recourse to Agni, lord of food, with his own share; verily he makes him a lord of food; he becomes a lord of food. He who is long ill should offer a cake on eight potsherds to Agni, the purifying, to Agni, the purifier, to Agni, the pure; in that he offers to Agni, the purifying, thereby to Agni, possessed of wealth; i and k that to Agni, the racer; i and m that to Agni with Agni; n and v that to Agni with light.

he bestows health upon him; in that (he offers) to Agni, the purifier [2], thereby he bestows speech upon him; in that (he offers) to Agni, the pure, thereby he bestows life upon him; even if his life is gone, he yet lives. He who desires sight should make the same offering; in that he offers to Agni, the purifying, he thereby bestows breath upon him; in that (he offers) to Agni, the purifier, thereby he bestows speech upon him; in that (he offers) to Agni, the pure, thereby he bestows sight upon him [8]; even if he is blind, he yet sees. He who desires offspring should offer a cake on eight potsherds to Agni with sons, and a cake on eleven potsherds to Indra, who has sons; verily Agni begets offspring for him and Indra makes it grow. He who desires, 'May I be possessed of sap', should offer an oblation cooked in goat's milk to Agni, full of sap; verily he has recourse to Agni, full of sap, with his own share; verily he makes him possessed of sap [4]; he becomes possessed of sap. It is cooked in goat's milk; the she-goat is connected with Agni; verily straightway he wins sap. He who desires, 'May I be possessed of wealth', should offer a cake on eight potsherds to Agni, possessed of wealth; verily he has recourse to Agni, possessed of wealth, with his own share, and he makes him possessed of wealth; he becomes possessed of wealth. When battle is joined, he should offer a cake on eight potsherds to Agni, the racer; 1 for a race [5] he desires to run, who is fain to conquer in battle; Agni of the gods is the racer; verily he has recourse to Agni with his own share; he runs the race, he slays the foe, he conquers in the battle, and like Agni he is not to be overcome. He for whom fire they take out again (from the Garhapatya fire) to place on the Ahavaniya2 should offer a cake on eight potsherds to Agni with Agni; one of these (fires) has a portion assigned, one has not a portion assigned; they uniting overpower the sacrificer [6], and he is liable to suffer ruin; in that he offers to Agni with Agni, he appeases him with his own share; the sacrificer does not suffer ruin. He whose fire goes out after it has been taken out (from the Garhapatya) before the Agnihotra has been offered should offer a cake on eight potsherds to Agni with light; (they say), 'Should another' be taken out, after lighting up (from the Garhapatya)'? That should not be done. Since the former is taken out for a definite share, how should another [7] be taken out for (it)? He should deposit the extinguished embers and produce fire by friction, (with the words), 'Hence first was Agni born, from his own womb, the all-knower; he with Gayatri, Tristubh, Jagati shall bear the oblation to the gods, the wise ones'; with the metres he begets him from his own womb; 'this is

ii. 2. 5. He1 who is calumniated should offer on twelve potsherds to Vaiçvānara, an oblation to Varuna, and an oblation to Dadhikravan; in that there is (an offering) on twelve potsherds to Vaicvanara, and Agni Vaicvanara is the year; verily he satisfies him with the year, he smites off the evil hue; by (the offering) to Varuna he frees him from the noose of Varuna; by Dadhikravan he purifies him. The sacrificial fee is gold; gold is a purifier; verily he purifies him; his food becomes fit to eat. The same (offering) he should make who desires offspring; the year [1] unpropitiated burns up the womb of offspring, of cattle, for him who being fit for offspring does not obtain offspring; in that there is (an offering) on twelve potsherds for Vaiçvanara, and Agni Vaiçvanara is the year; verily he propitiates the year with its own share; it propitiated begets offspring for him from his own womb; by (the offering) to Varuna he frees him from the noose of Varuna; by Dadhikravan he purifies him. The sacrificial fee is gold; gold is a purifier; verily he purifies him [2]; he obtains offspring. When a son is born he should offer on twelve potsherds to Vaiçvanara; in that there is (an offering) on eight potsherds, he purifies him with the Gayatri, with splendour; in that there is (an offering) on nine potsherds, he bestows brilliance upon him with the Trivrt (Stoma); in that there is (an offering) on ten potsherds, he bestows proper food upon him with the Virāj; in that there is (an offering) on eleven potsherds, he bestows power upon him with the Tristubh; in that there is (an offering) on twelve potsherds, he bestows cattle upon him with the Jagati; he upon whose birth he offers this sacrifice becomes pure [3], brilliant, an eater of food, powerful, possessed of cattle. He is cut off from the world of heaven who, being a sacrificer at new and full moon, the sacrifice either at the new or the full moon omits, for the new and full moon offerings are made for the world of heaven; if he has omitted the sacrifice either at the new or the full moon, he should offer to Vaiçvanara on twelve potsherds; Agni Vaicvanara is the year; verily he delights the year; verily also he brings up the year for him for the winning of the world of heaven [4]; verily also grasping the deities he goes to the world of heaven. He who removes the fire is the slayer of the hero among the TPr. xiv. 2. 3 prescribes *kravene, whence the reading in one MS. cited in the BI. ed. *kravenne, which is a mistake from the use of the Virams, as Weber points out, as seen in Weber's MS. D, while the forms with was are actually found in some MSS. and printed in the BI. ed., i. 889, and the Mysore ed., iii. 371.

Cf. KS. x. 4; MS, ii. 1. 2; BCS. xiii. 8. The verses are in i. 5. 11, u-q. a-f are four alternatives for the Vaiquanara offering; g and h accompany that to Varuna; i and k that to the Maruts; i and m that to Agni; p and q that to the Maruts.

gods: formerly righteous Brahmans did not eat his food; he should offer to Agni on eight potsherds, to Vaicyanara on twelve potsherds, when he is about to remove the fire; in that there is (an offering) on eight potsherds, the Gavatrî has eight syllables. Agni is connected with the Gavatri: to Agni in his full extent he shows hospitality: verily also that is as when one makes preparation for a man about to go to (another) people [5]. (The offering) to Vaicvanara is on twelve potsherds; the year has twelve months the birthplace of Agni is the year; verily he makes him go to his own birthplace; his food becomes fit to eat. He who desires a village should offer on twelve potsherds to Vaicvanara, and to the Maruts on seven potsherds: (the offering) to Vaicvanara he places on the Ahavaniya, that to the Maruts on the Garhapatya, for the avoidance of confusion. (The offering) to Vaicvanara is on twelve potsherds; the year has twelve months; verily by the year he removes his rivals for him; there is one to the Maruts [6]; the Maruts are the subject class among the gods; verily by the subjects among the gods he wins for him the subjects among men; (the offering) is on seven potsherds; the Maruts are in seven troops; verily in troops he wins his rivals for him; he deposits (the offering) when (the verses) are being repeated; verily he makes the people follow him.

ii. 2. 6. He¹ who is about to engage in a conflict should offer an oblation to Aditi; Aditi is this (earth); verily in time gone by they were used to rest upon it.² He who has come to the place should offer to Vaiçvānara on twelve potsherds; Agni Vaiçvānara is the year, the place of the gods is the year; from that place the gods drove the Asuras in defeat;² in that he offers to Vaiçvānara on twelve potsherds, he strives for⁴ the abode of the gods; he wins this conflict. Those two wipe (their sin) off upon him [1] who cats the food of two enemies; he who has eaten the food of two enemies should offer to Vaiçvānara on twelve potsherds; Agni Vaiçvānara is the year; verily he eats what the year has made sweet; those two do not wipe (their sin) off upon him. For the year these two make compact who make compact; him of them who first acts with treachery Varuna seizes; he who of two who have made compact first shows treachery should offer on twelve use of the abl. is probably due to the sense being conquered (or driven) away from the dydama; cf. Speijer, ZDMG. lxv. 320, 321, correcting Hertel, ZDMG. lxiv. 661.

It is of course possible that dyilans means 'in': in that case dyiland above probably should be considered as meaning 'from that (as a basis)'. The loc. in the first case is that of 'end', which Oldenberg (ZDMG, lxii, 459 sec.) uses to explain the uncertain comunicate.

potsherds to Vaievānara; Agni Vaievānara is the year; verily having obtained the year thereafter he acts with treachery against one who has lost Varuna's protection 1 [2]; Varuna does not seize him. The nature of the sheep 3 he accepts who accepts a sheep; having accepted a sheep he should offer to Vaievānara, Agni Vaievānara is the year; verily he accepts (the ewe) made suitable by the year; he does not accept the nature of the sheep. A measure 3 of himself he obtains who accepts (an animal) with teeth in both jaws, whether horse or man; he who has accepted (an animal) with teeth in both jaws [3] should offer on twelve potsherds to Vaicvanara; Agni Vaicyanara is the year; verily he accepts it made suitable by the year; he does not obtain a measure of himself. He who is eager to win wealth should offer to Vaicvanara on twelve potsherds; Agni Vaicvanara is the year; when a man for a year goes about among folk he becomes worthy of wealth. In that he offers to Vaicvanara on twelve potsherds, he moves towards wealth gained by the year: people are fain to give him gifts. He, who having yoked the year [4], does not let it go, becomes without support; after his return be should offer the same sacrifice to Vaicvānara; (the year) which he vokes he lets go with its own share, for support; the rope with which he drives the last of his cows he should cast against his foe; verily he casts misfortune upon him.

ii. 2. 7. He⁷ who desires cattle should offer an oblation to Indra; cattle are connected with Indra; verily he has recourse to Indra with his own share; verily he gives him cattle; verily he becomes possessed of cattle; it is an oblation; verily for him from his own place of birth he produces cattle. He who desires cattle should offer a cake on eleven potsherds to Indra, the powerful; cattle are power; verily he has recourse to Indra, the powerful, with his own share; he gives him [1] power and cattle; verily he becomes Sayana renders nirrarunden as regenitürakum, but this seems to spoil the whole sense.

² Asyam means, according to Sayana, in the opinion of some (eks) papans clemarogals, but this seems very dubious; the 'nature of the sheep' is sufficient sense.

Here again Sayana goes off the line in taking mitra as himsom. The reason of the word being used is, of course, the fact that man like certain animals has incisors in either jaw; see Vedic Index, I. 98.

* jandel has here a different sense to that on p. 147, n. 4.

⁴ The opt, here is probably generic (cf. Kelth, 20 [s.o.s. 1s] Attareya Āranyaka, p. 247), but may be a case of attraction; it differs in use considerably from such cases as ii. 2, 7, 4, where the opt. in the protasis is also potential. Ap. explains bhrātreyagarum abhidadhyād gogihe edsya nirasyet; Baudh. bhrātreyasya gogihe nyasyati.

⁷ Cf. KS. x. 8, 9; MS. ii. 2. 9, 10; BCS. xiii, 11, 12. The verses are in i. 6. 12; α and b are used for Indra; c and d for Indra, the powerful; ε and f for Indra, possessed of heat; g and h for Indra of the hymn; i and k and l (l and k are alternatives) for Indra, deliverer from tribulation; m and n and c and p are alternatives for Indra, repeller of foes; q and r for Indra, the protector; s and t for Indra of the Arka and the Acvamedha.

He who desires splendour should offer a cake on eleven potsherds to Indra, possessed of heat; heat is splendour; verily he has recourse to Indra with his own share; he bestows upon him splendour; verily he becomes resplendent. He who desires food should offer a cake on eleven potsherds to Indra of the hymn; 1 the hymn is the food of the gods; verily he has recourse to Indra of the hymn with his own share [2]; he gives him food; verily he becomes an eater of food. He who desires prosperity should offer a cake on eleven potsherds to Indra. possessed of heat, and to Indra, the powerful, and to Indra of the hymn; in that he offers to Indra, possessed of heat, he thereby makes his 2 head; in that (he offers) to Indra, the powerful, he thereby makes his body; in that (he offers) to Indra of the hymn, he becoming prosperous finds support in food; verily he prospers. He who is seized by misfortune should offer a cake on eleven potsherds to Indra [3], deliverer from tribulation, tribulation is misfortune; verily he has recourse to Indra, deliverer from tribulation, with his own share; verily he delivers him from the misfortune, from tribulation. He to whom the great sacrifice does not resort should offer a cake on eleven potsherds to Indra, of the Arka and the Acvamedha; the Arka and the Acvamedha are the two end bodies of the great sacrifice; verily he has recourse to Indra, of the Arka and the Acvamedha, with his own share; verily he moves for him the great sacrifice from the ends, and the great sacrifice resorts to him. ii. 2. 8. He b who desires a village should offer a cake on eleven potsherds to Indra, who goes straight forward; verily he has recourse to Indra, who goes straight forward, with his own share; verily he makes his followers

⁴ The Arka and Acvamedha as parts of the Acvamedha are dealt with in v. 7. 5. 5. Cf. CB. x. 6. 4. 8.

The rendering of arkavant as 'holding the thunderbolt', which Monier Williams adopts from Böhtlingk, is here at any rate not in point. The hymn shows that arka here is 'praise' as usual (Bergaigne, Rel. Ved. i. 270; cf. Bloomfield, ZDMG. xlviii. 570). In the term, Arka, used of the fire ritual, it has the sense of radiance confined with a reference to the praise.

Balbaja grass he should fasten to the kindling-stick [1]; where the cow being covered made water, thence grew the Balbaja; verily making him follow the way of the cows he causes him to obtain 2 cows. To Indra, the angry, the wise, he should offer a cake on eleven potsherds when battle is joined; with power, with anger, and with wisdom 3 one wins the battle; verily he has recourse to Indra, the angry, the wise, with his own share; verily he bestows upon him power, anger, and mind; he wins [2] the battle. The same offering should be make whose mind is affected and who as it were injures himself,4 for these are departed from him; verily he whose mind is affected and who injures himself has recourse to Indra, the angry, the wise, with his own share: verily he bestows upon him power, anger, and wisdom; his mind is not affected and he does not injure himself.6 He who desires, 'May people be fain to give to me', should offer a cake on eleven potsherds to Indra, the giver [3]; verily he has recourse to Indra, the giver, with his own share; verily he makes people fain to give to him; people become fain to give to him. ^{*} bhrantah is the version of Sayana for seapsimpapah.

^{*} The form of sentence is awkward : the real sense is that he recovers from his mental affliction, and the negative here really belongs to the adjectives, not to the verb.

Prajāpati from the Çakvarī fashioned the (verse containing the word) 'rich', for atonement, to prevent burning. For him who being fit for prosperity is equal with his fellows he should offer this (offering) for Indra on eleven potsherds; verily he has recourse to Indra with his own share; verily he bestows power upon him. The (verse containing the word) 'rich' is the Puronuvākyā, for atonement, to prevent burning; the Yājyā is in the Çakvarī (metre); the Çakvarī is the thunderbolt, the thunderbolt kindles him for prosperity, he becomes prosperous.

ii, 2, 9. He 1 who practises witchcraft should offer to Agni and Visnu on eleven potsherds; Sarasvatī should have a portion of the butter, and to Brhaspati an oblation (be offered); in that there is (an offering) on eleven potsherds to Agni and Visnu, and all the gods are Agni and the sacrifice is Visnu, with all the gods and the sacrifice he practises witchcraft against him; Sarasvatī has a portion of the butter; Sarasvatī is speech; verily with speech he practises against him; the oblation is Brhaspati's, Brhaspati is the holy power (Brahman) of the gods: verily with the holy power (Brahman) he practises against him [1]. Him who practises witchcraft they practise then against; he should double 2 each of the Puronuvākyās, for special employment. With the same (offering) should be sucrifice who is practised against; verily he sets gods against gods, the sacrifice against the sacrifice, speech against speech, the Brahman against the Brahman; between the gods and the sacrifice he creeps along; from no quarter is he injured; he who practises against him does not lay him low. He to whom the sacrifice does not resort should offer on eleven potsherds to Agni and Visnu [2]; all the gods are Agni, the sacrifice is Visnu; verily he has recourse to Agni and Visnu with their own share; verily they give him the sacrifice; the sacrifice resorts to him. He who desires sight should offer an oblation in ghee to Agni and Visnu; by the eye of Agni men see, (by the eye) of the sacrifice the gods (see); verily he has recourse to Agni and Visnu with their own share; verily they [3] bestow sight upon him; he becomes possessed of sight. The butter is the seed of the cow, the rice grain of the ox; verily from the pair he produces for him sight. The oblation is (made) in ghee, ghee is brilliance, sight is brilliance; verily by brilliance he wins for him brilliance and sight. His foe in sacrificing gains the power and strength of him who sacrifices not; when his foe is sacrificing he should offer against him a sort of sacrifice; 1 he does not then gain his power [4] and strength. He should offer before speech is uttered: all the speech of his foe he thus gains unuttered, and his speech as uttered other speeches follow after; they bestow upon the sacrificer power and strength. Just at the time of the morning pressing he should offer on eight potsherds to Agni and Visnu; Sarasvatī should have a share of the butter, and to Brhaspati an oblation (be offered); in that it is (offered) on eight potsherds, and the Gayatri has eight syllables, and the morning pressing is connected with the Gayatri, he obtains thereby the morning pressing [5]. Just at the time of the midday pressing he should offer on eleven potsherds to Agni and Visnu; Sarasvatī should have a portion of the butter and to Brhasnati an oblation (be offered); in that (the offering) is on eleven potsherds, and the Tristubh has eleven syllables, and the midday pressing is connected with the Tristubh, he obtains thereby the midday pressing. Just at the time of the third pressing he should offer to Agni and Visnu on twelve potsherds; Sarasvatī should have a share of the butter, and to Brhaspati the oblation (be offered); in that (the offering) is on twelve potsherds. and the Jagati has twelve syllables, and the third pressing is connected with the Jagati, he obtains thereby the third pressing. Verily he sets gods against gods [6], the sacrifice against the sacrifice, speech against speech. the Brahman against the Brahman; verily by means of the potsherds he makes up the metres, by means of the cakes the pressings. At the time of the (offering of the) cow, he should offer on one potsherd to Mitra and Varuna, this (offering) corresponds to his foe's cow which is to be slaughtered; his (offering) is on one potsherd, for he cannot obtain the animal (offering) by means of (many) potsherds.

ii. 2. 10. Yonder ² sun did not shine, ³ the gods sought an atonement for him, for him they offered this oblation to Soma and Rudra; verily thereby they bestowed brightness upon him. If he desires to become resplendent, he should offer for him this oblation to Soma and Rudra; verily he has recourse to Soma and Rudra with their own portion; verily they bestow upon him splendour; he becomes resplendent. He should offer on the full moon day of the month Tisya; ⁴ Tisya is Rudra [1], the full moon

Of. KS. xi. 5; MS. ii. 1. 5; BÇS. xiii. 17, 18; ApÇS. xix. 19. 8-11. The verses are in i. 8. 22; k-m are six Dhäyyås (m is three), of which two are to be used; o and p are for Soma and Rudra; q and r are for Soma and Püşan; cf. MÇS, v. 1, 6. It is curious that as cited in the comm. Ap, gives correctly k as the first of the Dhayya set: in the text of this edition and in Baudh, the first is t; both these versions leave k unnoticed.

Bee ii. 1. 4, 5 ad but.

⁴ The sense is clear, the formation is doubt-is Soma: verily straightway he wins splendour. He makes him sacrifice on an enclosed (altar), to acquire splendour. The butter is churned from milk of a white (cow) with a white calf: butter is used for the sprinkling, and they purify themselves with butter; verily he produces whatever splendour exists. 'Too much splendour is produced', they say, 'he is liable to become a leper'; he should insert the verses of Manu's; whatever Manu said is medicine [2]: verily he makes medicine for him. If he fear, 'I shall become a leper', he should offer an oblation to Soma and Pusan; man has Soma as his deity, cattle are connected with Pūsan; verily he makes him a skin by means of his own deity and cattle; he does not become a leper. He who desires offspring should offer an oblation to Soma and Rudra: Soma is the bestower of seed, Agni is the begetter of offspring: verily Soma bestows on him seed, Agni begets offspring; he obtains [3] offspring. He who practises witchcraft should offer an oblation to Soma and Rudra; man has Soma as his deity, Agni is this Rudra; verily ransoming him from his own deity he entrusts him to Rudra; swiftly he attains ruin. He who is long ill should offer an oblation to Soma and Rudra; the sap of him who is long ill goes to Soma, the body to Agni; verily from Soma he ransoms his sap, from Agni his body; even if [4] his life be gone, he yet lives. The Hotr loosens him that is swallowed by Soma and Rudra 1 and he is liable to be ruined; an ox must be given by the Hotr; the ox is a carrier, the Hotr is a carrier; verily he saves himself as a carrier by means of a carrier. He who desires, 'In his own abode may I produce a fee for him', should offer an oblation to Soma and Rudra; 2 selecting an altar he should dig up half, and half not, spread half the strew, and half not, pile on half the kindling-wood and half not; verily in his own abode he produces a foe for him.

ii. 2. 11. He who desires a village should offer on eleven potsherds to Indra, on seven potsherds to the Maruts; verily he has recourse to Indra and the Maruts with their own share; verily they make his fellows subject to him; he becomes possessed of a village. He places (the offering) for ful: according to Wackernagel, Altind. Gramm. II. i. 162, the form is a Dvandva, with the dual sign of the first neuter, made into a singular neuter to denote the day: the ordinary view suggested by Weber (see Valic Index, i. 409) is that Tisyā is a feminine.

bhrátycyakjetram gateá, Ap.; aparakjetramárvádávám, Baudh.

An the loc. denotes where the sacrificer is when swallowed, it is correct, but the case may also be compared with Speijer, Vedicke und Sanskrif Syntax, § 12.

Of. KS. xl. 5; MS. ii. 1. 5, 6; BCS. xiii. 19, 20; ApCS. xix. 19. 12-20. 4. The verses are in ii. 1. 11; a and b and c and d are for Indra and the Maruts; e and f for Indra and the All-gods; g and h for the Maruts; i and k (with l as an alternative) for the four sets of offerings to Agni, Soma, Indra, Varuna, while m and n are for the usual offering to Agni Svistakrt.

Indra on the Ahavaniya, that for the Maruts on the Garhapatya, for the prevention of confusion. (The offering) for the Maruts is on seven potsherds: the Maruts are in seven troops; verily by troops he wins his fellows for him. He places (it) down when the recitation 1 is proceeding; verily he makes the people [1] obedient to him. The same offering should he make who desires, 'May I cause strife between the ruling class and the people.' As he cuts off from Indra's (cake), he should say, 'Do thou recite for Indra'; having directed (the Agnidh) to utter the Crausat call, he should say, 'Utter the Yājyā for the Maruts'; as he cuts off from the Maruts' cake, he should say, 'Do thou recite for the Maruts': having directed (the Agnidh), he should say, 'Utter the Yajya for Indra'; verily he produces strife between them for their shares, and they keep piercing each other. The same offering [2] should he make who desires, 'May they be at unity.' According to each deity should he cut off and according to each utter the Yāivā: verily he arranges them in due order with their portions; they are at unity. He who desires a village should offer on eleven potsherds to Indra, and on twelve potsherds to the All-gods; verily he has recourse to Indra and the All-gods with their own share: verily they subject his fellows to him; he becomes possessed of a village. Having cut off from Indra's (cake) he should cut off' from the All-gods', and then from Indra's [3]; verily with power (indrivéna) he surrounds his fellows on both sides. The sacrificial fee is a garment with a fringe,3 for the delectation of his fellows. He who desires a village should offer to the Maruts an oblation of panic seed in the milk of a speckled (cow); from the milk of a speckled (cow) were the Maruts born, of the speckled (cow) panic seed; his fellows have the Maruts for their deity; verily he has recourse to the Maruts with their own share; verily they subject his fellows to him; he becomes possessed of a village. The Yājyā and the Anuvākyā contain the word 'dear' [4]; verily he makes him dear to his fellows; the Puronuvākyā has two feet; verily he wins bipeds; the Yājyā has four feet; verily he wins quadrupeds. The gods and the Asuras were in conflict: the gods were mutually at variance; unwilling to accept the pre-eminence of another they went apart in four bodies, Agni with the Vasus, Soma with the Rudras, Indra with the Maruts, Varuna with the Adityas. Indra had recourse to Prajāpati; he made him [5] sacrifice with the verse for harmony; to Agni with the Vasus he offered a cake on eight potsherds, to Soma with the Rudras an oblation, to Indra with the Maruts a cake on eleven potsherds, to Varuna with the Ādityas an oblation; then indeed the gods agreed to recognize Indra's pre-eminence. Him who is mutually at variance with his fellows he should cause to offer with the verse for harmony; he should offer to Agni with the Vasus a cake on eight potsherds, to Soma with the Rudras an oblation, to Indra with the Maruts a cake on eleven potsherds, to Varuna with the Ādityas an oblation; so him becoming Indra his fellows recognize as superior; he becomes the best of his fellows.

This verse is obscure; khidram, however, probably means 'weight' (Macdonell, Fed. Gramm. p. 130) and not a means of rending the mountains, i.e. the thunderbolt, an interpretation which induces Griffith to see in Prithivi here, not a terrestrial, but an atmospheric deity, as Sayana does: jinopi may be taken vaguely: Griffith (Trans. i. 550) apparently reads bhumim.

3 akhibhih is paralleled by the instances cited by Delbrück, Altind. Synt. p. 130; perim refers according to Pischel (Ved. Stud. i. 81 seq.) to the penis, and his rendering (i. 47) of edjam na hisantum is followed; cf. Oldenberg, Egreda-Noten, i. 45, 366. Geldner (Egreda-Glossar) prefers 'wie einen rauschenden Flügel', which is unlikely. Other renderings are possible, if edja is 'horse', but that is improbable, as hisantam is probably from hi.

* raddarens doubtless alludes to the Soma suiting the stomach. asmi followed by the singular is not rare; the plural is not precisely equivalent to the sing.: It is true that the one man speaks but he is in pari passe with the rest: see RV. v. 4. 10, which Delbrück (Altind, Synt. p. 561) hardly correctly explains, and which might have been referred to at p. 204. In r below the plural is similarly used of the gods at large.

The meaning of epalaprobharma is uncertain: gigl no doubt refers to Soma with the gigs (Hillebrandt, Ved. Myth. i. 285).

The sense of the verse which has no parallel in the Vedic literature is uncertain: Sayana solves the difficulty by making somal accusative and bridges = brhat; but the text gives a possible sense: the Soma and Jamadagni alike shine conspicuous. Sayana interprets the second half-line as applying to the keeping of the Soma, which is turn in the sense of 'cager to get out', within the worshipper. That giveth delight and invigoration;
When the hymn with the radiance of Soma shall speed forth, Then shall Indra show his might in the contests.

r From the mouth to thee, O Viṣṇu, do I utter the Vaṣaṭ call;
Do thou accept my oblation, O Çipiviṣṭa[4];
Let my fair hymns of praise cause thee to wax great;
Do ye protect us ever with blessings.

s That name of thee, the noble, to-day I celebrate, O Çipivişta, knowing the ways; I, the weaker, sing thee the strong, That rulest beyond this region.

t What was there to be disclosed in thee, O Viṣṇu, What time thou didst declare, 'I am Çipiviṣṭa'? Conceal not from us that form of thine What time thou dost change thy shape in battle [5]."

Wealth of heroes in abundance; Quicken us to richness in sons.

- v Give to us, O Agni, a hundred, give a thousandfold; Like doors disclose for us booty for renown; Make with the prayer sky and earth propitious; Like bright heaven the dawns have shone forth.
- W Agni give wealth that decketh the hero; Agni the Rsi who winneth thousands; Agni hath placed the oblation in the sky; In many a place are the abodes of Agni.4
- x Destroy [6] us not.
- y Bring to us."

This verse again has no parallel and the sense is uncertain: but the almost (cf. i. 8. 13. 3) invariable use of ca in the TS, makes it practically certain that midam is adjectival, as is pumassim (for which Bloomfield (Vedic Conordance, p. 974) suggests pumaum). Sayana takes sobildhow with te, which is impossible.

² arydh is uncertain in sense; see Pischel, ZDMG. xl. 125; Ved. Stud. 1. 298; Geldner, Ved. Stud. iil. 72 seq.; Oldenberg, ZDMG. liv. 167 seq.; Rgreela-Noten, i. 363, 364; vayandmi here seems certainly to denote the knowledge of the modes of song. tardsom disciplin may be compared with the compound paperasyas—common in the Brahmana style.

The verse certainly appears to have a reference to some change of shape by Visnu in contest, and if the MS. ii. 3. 18 is right in taking cipicists (on which cf. Muir, Sanskrit Texts, iv. 85, 86) as denoting smallness, then the dwarf incarnation of Visnu seems to be alluded to (cf. pariolitysam: the dwarf form was not really discreditable); cf. Macdonell, Vedic Mythology, p. 41; JRAS. XXVI. 168-177. Johansson (Solfigeln in Indien, pp. 12 sec.) and Charpentier (VOJ. XXV. 427) sec, however, in cipi the lings.

* dab must really be a second person: for the nom. in such cases see i. 4. 19, n. 1; vi. 1. 2, n. 2; Keith, JRAS. 1908, p. 1124; La Roche, Beitr. i. 208.

Thesense is uncertain: Sayana distinguishes between one who speaks gramps in the Sabha and one who is a secret counsellor; but the MS, has subad in this passage.

Sayana is troubled by the construction, and in the first case takes the abl. with mir undami: the sense seems to be as in the text.

I madhyamedyām is uncertain in sense: if the pole is in the middle there must be three, which is a very unusual number (Vesic Index, i. 82). MÇS, ascribes it to the rathardhams. If the sense is the 'middle of the pole' there is a lack of parallels with madhyama, though madhyamains is cited by Wackernagel (Altind. Gramm. II. 1. 254) and is a good parallel.

³ The ritual contemplates taking the dust of the victorious sovereign's foot with the words adite 'nu manyama, and then, according to Ap., he approaches the sacrificer with upa preto, and then he pours part of it over his outer garments with satyacta, and the rest on his breast with the monay. Baudh, does not follow the order of the Sanhita and makes upa preta precede the other two fragments, being used as he brings up the dust, while with saturfply he puts it in the hand of the sacrifloor who takes it with the minah. Both these versions seem clearly to depart from the text. MCS, puts it in a different action as one text, where he takes dust oblation to the Adityas and attach pegs to the kindling-wood; verily he attains what cannot be taken away. (The pegs) are of Açvattha wood; the Açvattha is the might of the Maruts; verily with might he attains the people; seven are they, the Maruts are in seven troops; verily in troops he attains the people.

ii, 3. 2. The 1 gods were afraid of death; they had recourse to Prajapati; for them he offered this (offering) to Prajapati of a hundred Kṛṣṇalas in weight; 2 verily by it he bestowed upon them immortality; for him who fears death he should offer to Prajapati this (offering) of a hundred Krsnalas: verily he has recourse to Prajapati with his own share; verily he bestows life upon him; he lives all his days. It is of a hundred Kṛṣṇalas in weight; man has a hundred (years of) life, and a hundred powers; verily in life, in power [1] he finds support. (The offering) is in ghee; ghee is life, gold is immortality; verily he unites him with life and immortality; four Krsnalas' weight on each occasion he cuts off to obtain the four cuttings-off; one by one he brings to the Brahman priest, and one by one he bestows life upon the sacrificer. Yonder sun did not shine, the gods sought an atonement for it, for it they offered this oblation to Sūrya; verily thereby they bestowed upon it [2] radiance. For him who desires splendour he should offer this oblation to Surya; verily he has recourse to vonder sun with his own share; verily he bestows upon him splendour; he becomes resplendent. On both sides are ornaments (of gold); 3 verily on both sides he bestows radiance upon him. At each fore-offering he offers a Krsnala weight; verily from the quarters he wins splendour for him. He should offer on eight potsherds to Agni, on twelve potsherds to Savity, and an oblation to earth [3] who desires, 'May I gain gold; may gold resort to me.' In that it is (offered) to Agni, gold is connected with Agni; verily by him whose is gold he gains it; it is (offered) to Savitr; verily instigated by Savitr he gains it; to earth an oblation is offered; verily on it he gains it; gold resorts to him. He who gains gold is deprived of power and strength; the same offering should he make who gains gold; he is not deprived of power and strength. The same [4] offering the giver; x and y for Agni, the bestower; x and as are for Prajāpati; bb and cc are for Vāyu, and dd and se for Indra. Neither of these sacrifices is dealt with in BCS. or ApCS.

he should make whose gold is lost; in that it is (offered) to Agni, and gold is connected with Agni, by him whose is gold he gains it; it is (offered) to Savitr; verily instigated by Savitr he gains it; to earth an oblation is offered; in this what is lost is lost; verily in it he gains it. Indra [5] by force drunk the Soma of Tvastr, he went apart on all sides, he was deprived of power, of Soma drinking; what he vomited up, that became panic seeds; he had recourse to Prajapati; for him he offered this oblation of panic seeds to Soma and Indra; verily thereby he bestowed upon him power and Soma drinking; he who vomits Soma is deprived of power, of Soma drinking; for him who vomits Soma [6], he should offer this oblation of panic seeds; verily he has recourse to Soma and Indra; verily they bestow upon him power and Soma drinking; he is not deprived of power and of Soma drinking. In that it is (offered) to Soma, he wins Soma drinking: in that it is (offered) to Indra, and Soma drinking is power, verily he wins power and Soma drinking; it is of panic seeds, Soma is it [7]; verily straightway he wins Soma drinking. He who desires cattle should offer a cake on eight potsherds to Agni, the giver, and a cake on eleven potsherds to Indra, the bestower; verily Agni produces cattle for him, Indra makes them grow up. These are curds, honey, ghee, waters, and parched grain; that is the form of cattle; verily by their form he wins cattle; there are five takings, for cattle are fivefold; 1 it is of many forms, for cattle are of many forms [8], (verily it serves) for completion; it is offered to Prajapati; cattle are connected with Prajapati; verily Prajapati produces cattle for him; honey is the body of man; in that he offers honey on the fire, verily thus the sacrificer places his body in the fire; the Yājyā and the Anuvākyā are in the Paŭkti metre, man is fivefold, cattle are fivefold; verily ransoming his body from death he wins cattle.

ii. 3. 3. The 2 gods desiring glory performed a sacrificial session bounded by success; to Soma the king among them glory came, he went to the hill, Agni followed him; Agni and Soma, those two, united; Indra, being parted from the sacrifice followed after them; to them he said, 'Make me to sacrifice.' For him they offered this sacrifice, to Agni on eight potsherds, to Indra on eleven potsherds, to Soma an oblation; verily thereby they conferred upon him brilliance [1], power, and splendour. For him who is parted from the sacrifice 1 he should offer this sacrifice, to Agni on eight potsherds, to Indra on eleven potsherds, to Soma an oblation; in that it is (offered) to Agni, thereby he bestows brilliance upon him; in that it is (offered) to Indra, thereby (he bestows) power upon him; in that it is (offered) to Soma, thereby (he bestows) splendour; part of the offerings to Agni and Soma he should unite with that to Indra;2 verily he unites him with brilliance and splendour [2]. He whose desire is not fulfilled should offer on eleven potsherds to Agni and Soma; the Brahman is connected with Agni, he drinks Soma; verily he has recourse to his own deity with his own share; verily he unites him with his desire; his desire is fulfilled. He who desires splendour should offer on eight potsherds to Agni and Soma; verily he has recourse to Agni and Soma with their own share; verily they bestow upon him splendour; he becomes resplendent [3]. In that it is on eight potsherds, it is connected with Agni; in that it is of panic seeds, it is connected with Soma; (verily it serves) for prosperity. He who is afraid of impotence should offer an oblation of panic seeds to Soma, the strong. For the seed, the strength, departs from him, then he fears impotence; verily he has recourse to Soma, the strong; verily he bestows upon him seed and strength; he does not become impotent. He who desires a village should offer on eleven potsherds to Brahmanaspati [4]; verily he has recourse to Brahmanaspati with his own share; verily he subjects his fellows to him; he becomes possessed of a village. The Yājyā and the Anuvākyā have the word 'troop'; verily he makes him possess troops of his fellows. The same sacrifice should he offer who desires, 'May I bring the people to rain with respect to the Brahman'; he should use as the Yājyā and the Anuvākyā verses referring to the Maruts; verily he brings the people to ruin with respect to the Brahman.

ii. 3. 4. He³ who desires the heaven should offer an oblation to Aryaman; Aryaman is yonder sun; verily he has recourse to Aryaman with his own share; he makes him attain the world of heaven. He should offer an oblation to Aryaman who desires, 'May people be fain to give to me'; Aryaman is yonder sun, Aryaman is he who gives; verily he has recourse to Aryaman with his own share; he makes [1] people fain to give to him;

Wackernagel (Altind. Gramm. II. i. 195, 200, 302, 303) discusses the cases of such compounds as yajāa-vibhrasja, but the trans. adopted evades the difficulty of taking this one as irregular.

² This construction seems to have puzzled Ap. as he gives the alternatives of the offering being united (which ignores the gen.) or that there are fragments of the two taken, which is clearly the sense of the gen.

Cf. KS. xi. 4; MS. ii. 2. 4; BÇS. xiii. 27. The verses are in ii. 3. 14; t and u are for Aryaman; v and w for Indra; x and y (with v as an alternative) for Brhaspati.

people are fain to give to him. He should offer an oblation to Arvaman who desires, 'May I go prosperously among men'; Aryaman is vonder sun; verily he has recourse to Arvaman with his own share : verily he makes him go whither he is fain to go. Indra was the lowest in rank of the gods, he had recourse to Prajapati: for him he offered this (offering) of the after-shoots of rice1 to Indra on eleven potsherds [2]; verily he led him to the top of the gods; he made as the Yāivā and the Anuvākvā (verses) containing the words 'depth' and 'top'; verily from the depths he led him to the top; for the prince who is low in rank he should offer to Indra on eleven potsherds this (offering) of the after-shoots of rice; verily he has recourse to Indra with his own share; verily he leads him to the top of his fellows; the Yājyā and the Anuvakva contain the words 'depth' and 'top': verily from the depth he leads him to the top [3]; it is of the after-shoots of rice, for it is the deity of him who is low in rank; (verily it serves) for prosperity. For the Brahman who is low in rank he should offer to Brhaspati this oblation of the after-shoots of rice; verily he has recourse to Brhaspati with his own share; verily he leads him to the top of his equals; the Yajva and the Anuvakya contain the words 'depth' and 'top': verily he leads from the depth to the top; it is of the after-shoots of rice, for it is the deity of him who is low in rank ; (verily it serves) for prosperity.

ii. 3. 5. Prajāpati 2 had thirty-three daughters; he gave them to Soma, the king; of them he associated with Rohini; they returned in anger; then he followed and asked for them back; them he would not return; he said, 'Swear on oath that thou wilt equally associate (with them): then will I return them to you,' He took the oath, and he returned them. He associated with Rohini alone [1]. Illness * seized him; 'Illness has seized the king', that (saving) is the origin of the 'king's evil'; in that he became worse, that is (the origin) of the 'bad illness'; because he got it from his wives, that is (the origin) of the 'wife's disease' (Jayenya); him who knows thus the origin of these illnesses, these illnesses do not visit. He approached them respectfully; they said, 'Let us choose a boon; do thou associate equally with us.' For him [2] they offered this oblation to the Adityas; they freed him from his evil case. For him who is seized by the bad illness he should offer this oblation to the Adityas; verily he has recourse to the Adityas with their own share; verily they free him from his evil case. He should offer at the new moon; verily with its waxing he makes him wax. The Puronuvākyā is, 'He is born ever new'; verily thereby he bestows life upon him. The Yājyā is, 'The shoot which the Ādityas make to wax'; verily thereby he makes him wax.

ii, 3. 6. Prajapati1 assigned food to the gods; he said, 'Whatever shall be left over these worlds, be that mine.' That was left over these worlds. Indra, the king, Indra, the overlord, Indra, the sovereign; thence he milked these worlds threefold; that is the cause of its having three elements. For him of whom he desires, 'May he be an eater of food', let him offer this (offering) of three elements, to Indra, the king, a cake [1] on eleven potsherds, to Indra, the overlord, to Indra, the sovereign. Indra, the king, is this (world of earth), Indra, the overlord, is this (atmosphere), Indra, the sovereign, is yonder (world of heaven); verily he has recourse to these worlds with their own share; verily they bestow food on him; he becomes an eater of food. Even as one milks a cow ready to give milk by reason of its calf,2 so he milks these worlds, made ready, for desire, for food; he places (the cake) on potsherds face upwards, for variety. There are three cakes, these worlds are three; (verily they serve) to obtain these worlds; each one above the other is larger, for so as it were are these worlds; (verily they serve) for prosperity; he cuts off from all (the cakes) as he sets them up3 without making a failure; he recites (the verses) alternating, to prevent burning.

ii. 3. 7. The gods and the Asuras were in conflict: the Asuras conquered the gods, the gods being defeated became the servants of the Asuras; from them power and strength departed; Indra perceived this; he departed in pursuit of it; he could not win it. Then he departed from it, he had recourse to Prajāpati; he made him sacrifice with this (offering) with all the Prṣṭha (Stotras); verily with it he bestowed upon him power and strength. Him who desires power [1], desires strength, he should make him sacrifice with this (offering) with all the Prṣṭhas; verily he has recourse to these deities with their own share; verily they bestow upon him power and strength. In that he offers to Indra of the Rathantara, verily he wins the of the priest in putting the cakes each over the other. The passage recurs below, ii. 4. 11. 5, where abhighalam is found in the KS. parallel (xii, 4).

brilliance of Agni; in that (he offers) to Indra of the Brhat, verily he wins the brilliance of Indra; in that (he offers) to Indra of the Vairūpa, verily he wins the brilliance of Savitr [2]; in that (he offers) to Indra of the Vairūpa, verily he wins the brilliance of the creator; in that (he offers) to Indra of the Çākvara, verily he wins the brilliance of the Maruts; in that (he offers) to Indra of the Raivāta, verily he wins the brilliance of Brhaspati. So many are the brilliances, verily he wins them; he places (the cakes) on potsherds face upwards, for variety; the cake is on twelve potsherds [3], to secure the All-gods. He cuts off all around; verily all around he bestows on the sacrificer power and strength; he recites (the verses) alternating, to prevent burning. A horse, a bull, a ram, a goat, these are the sacrificial fee; for manliness. With this he should sacrifice who is being practised against; if these deities eat his food, men eat his also.

ii. 3. 8. Rajana 1 Kauneya went to Kratujit Janaki for a cure for eyesight;2 for him he offered this sacrifice, to Agni, the blazing, a cake on eight potsherds, to Sūrya an oblation, to Agni, the blazing, a cake on eight potsherds; verily thereby he bestowed sight upon him. For him who desires sight he should offer this sacrifice, to Agni, the blazing, a cake on eight potsherds; to Sūrya an oblation, to Agni, the blazing, a cake on eight potsherds; by the eye of Agni men see [1], (by the eye) of the sun the gods; verily he has recourse to Agni and Sürya with their own share; verily they bestow sight upon him; he becomes possessed of sight. In that there are two for Agni, he restores his eyes for him; in that there is (an oblation) for Sürya, (he restores) his nose; the two for Agni are on either side of that for Sürya; therefore the two eyes are on either side of the nose, therefore by the nose the eyes are separated. The Yajya and the Anuvākyā are alike, for the eye is alike; (verily it serves) for prosperity. 'Up that god that knoweth all', 'Seven bays in thy chariot', 'The radiant countenance of the gods hath arisen', (with these words) he offers lumps;3 verily he gives sight to him; what was his, that (is his again).

¹ The verses are in ii. 4. 14; i and m are for Agni; n and o (with p for alternative) for Surya. See BCS. xiii. 30; ApCS. xix. 23, 8-5.

² cakperminum denotes, according to BR. and MW., 'affected with illness of the eyes', but this seems rather unlikely. Sayana suggests the sense adopted in the text, although it is not certain if the rendering is correct. It agrees with the construction of such clauses, followed by timat, elsewhere.

From the oblation for Surya; the sacrificer eats them after receiving them from the Adhvaryu. The verses are found as regards the first and third (i. 4. 48 a and b), and the second (ii. 4. 14 o).

among my equals, dread, a guardian, a gainer of wealth.1

b Thou art affection; O ye gods of affection, those equals, youths, of one mind, them I love with my heart; may they love me with their hearts; make them of one mind with me; hail! Thou [1] art affection; O ye gods of affection, the women of one mind, them I love with my heart; may they love me with their hearts; make them of one mind with me; hail!

He who desires a village should offer to the All-gods (the sacrifice) for taking possession; his equals are connected with the All-gods; verily he has recourse to the All-gods with their own share; verily they subject his equals to him; he becomes possessed of a village. It is (the offering) for taking possession; taking possession is grasping the mind; verily he grasps the mind of his equals [2]. 'Thou art secure; may I be secure among my equals', (with these words) he puts the enclosing-sticks round; verily he invokes this blessing. Then all this comes to pass with regard to the equals of him for whom knowing thus these enclosing-sticks are put around. 'Thou art affection; O ye gods of affection', (with these words) he offers three oblations; so many are his equals, great, small, and women, them he wins, they being won wait on him.

ii. 3. 10. a What went new that became fresh butter; what crept that became clarified butter; that which became firm became ghee.3

b Thou art the breath of the Açvins; of that to thee let the two give whose breath thou art; hail! Thou art the breath of Indra; of that to thee let him give whose breath thou art; hail! Thou art the breath of Mitra and Varuṇa; of that to thee let them give whose breath thou with f the Adhvaryu takes the right hand of the sacrificer (so Ap.: according to Baudh, the Brahman here takes the sacrificer's hand).

² Cf. KS. xi. 7; MS. ii. 8. 4; BÇS. xiii. 82; ĀpÇS. xix. 23. 13-24. 12. For the Brahmana see TS. ii. 3. 11. 2-5. The section contains the Mantras for the sacrifice for life: a pravaria, 'ornament', is placed in the butter, a is substituted for the usual aceksana Mantras; and four Upahomas are offered with the Mantras in b; c is used while the sacrificer looks at the butter; then the Brahman priest takes the hand of the sacrificer, and the other priests his, and they pronounce the Mantra d; the sacrificer takes the ghee from the gold, and the Adhvaryu pronounces e;

In KS. the whole is thrown into the second person; it has aghripathöh; MS. has aghriyata. But the comm. and the MSS. here agree with each other in reading adhriyata and clearly it is right. The etymology is still quite a good one for a Brahmana.

4 yasya should be yayoù and probably it must be a mere blunder: tasya must probably be a part, gen. and not in apposition to te (gen. with da is rare and late; Delbrück, ii. 3. 11. To 2 Agni his body goes, to Soma his sap,—Varuna grasps him with Varuna's noose—to Sarasvatī the speech, to Agni and Viṣṇu the body of him who long is ill. For him who is long ill or who desires, 'May I live all my days', he should offer this sacrifice, to Agni on eight potsherds, to Soma an oblation, to Varuna on ten potsherds, to Sarasvatī an oblation, to Agni and Viṣṇu on eleven potsherds; verily he ransoms his body from Agni, his sap from Soma [1]; by the offering to Varuna he frees him from Varuna's noose; by the offering to Sarasvatī he bestows speech; all the gods are Agni, the sacrifice is Viṣṇu; verily by the gods and the sacrifice he heals him; even if his life is gone, he yet lives. 'What went new, that became fresh butter', (with these words) he looks upon the butter; verily he describes its form and greatness. 'Thou art the breath of the Açvins', he says; the Açvins are the physicians of the gods [2]; verily by them he makes

'Thou art the breath of Mitra and Varuna', he says; verily thereby he bestows expiration and inspiration upon him. 'Thou art the breath of the All-gods', he says; verily thereby he bestows strength on him. 'Stream of ghee, path of ambrosia' [3], he says; that is according to the text. Grasping the hand of the Brahman (priest) they speak around (him); separately they bestow life on the sacrificer; what was his that (is his again). From the gold [4] he drinks away the ghee; ghee is life, gold is ambrosia; verily from the ambrosia he drinks away life; it is a hundred (Kṛṣṇalas) in weight; man has a hundred (years) of life, a hundred powers; verily he finds support in life, in power. Or as many seasons as he deems that he will live, so many be the number, for prosperity. 'Him quicken, O Agni, for life, for radiance', he says; verily he bestows life and radiance upon him. 'O ye All-gods, that he may win old age', he says; verily he makes him win old age. 'Agni is full of life', (with these words) he1 takes his hand; these gods are full of life, they bestow life upon him, he lives all his life.

ii. 3. 12. Prajāpati ² led the horse to Varuņa, it ³ went to its own deity, he was afflicted; he saw this (offering) to Varuņa on four potsherds, he offered it; then indeed was he set free from Varuņa's noose. Varuņa seizes him who accepts the horse. As many horses as he accepts, so many (offerings) to Varuṇa should he offer; verily he has recourse to Varuṇa with his own share; verily he frees him from Varuṇa's noose [1]. (The offerings) are on four potsherds, for the horse has four feet; (verily they serve) for prosperity. He should offer an extra one; whatever (horse) he is going to accept or whatever (horse) he has overlooked, from that noose of Varuṇa is he set and that archat means ariam abaret, and so Eggeling (SBE. xury, xxiii, xxiv). That is hardly possible but it may be that the subject is the horse and that archat means 'afflicted'. Probably, however, it means that the horse went back to Prajapati as its primal deity and that Varuna avenged himself by causing Prajapati to become dropsical (piryadiryata). Hillebrandt (Mitra und Varuna, p. 64) thinks that Prajapati appropriates the steed from Varuna, but this is impossible syntax (cf. Speijer, Sanskrit Syntax, § 131).

So far as it goes this is open either to the interpretation of Baudh. (referring it to the Brahman) or of Ap. (referring it to the Adhvaryu), and no doubt the vagueness of the Brahmanas helped greatly ritual divergences.

² Cf. KS. xii. 6; MS. ii. 3. 3; BCS. xiii. 33; ApCS. makes no special mention. The verses are in ii. 5, 12; i and m are for Varuna; n and o for Surya; p and q for Apam Napat, with ras an alternative for q.

This is not very clear: Sayana thinks Prajapati is the subject of the second clause free. If he is going to accept another, he should offer in supplement an offering to Sürya on one potsherd; verily he makes yonder sun to rise. He goes to the waters as the final bath, Varuna is in the waters; verily straightway he appeases Varuna. After his return he should offer an oblation to Apām Napāt; the horse has its birthplace in the waters; verily he makes him go to his own birthplace; appeased he attends on him.

b That disease of yours, O Indra and Varuṇa, that is in the fire, that of yours I appease hereby; that disease of yours, O Indra and Varuṇa, that is in the two-footed cattle, the four-footed, the cattle-yard, the houses, the waters, the plants, the trees, that of yours I appease hereby.

Indra departs with his [1] power, Varuna seizes him with Varuna's noose, who is seized by evil; for him who is seized by evil, he should offer this (offering of) clotted milk to Indra and Varuna; verily Indra bestows power upon him, Varuna frees him from Varuna's noose. (The offering) is of clotted milk, for milk departs from him; verily he is seized with evil; in that it is of clotted milk, thereby he bestows milk upon him. In the clotted milk [2] he puts down the cake; verily he makes him possessed of a body, and also possessed of an abode. He separates it into four pieces; verily he finds supports in the quarters; he unites (the fires) again; verily he procures healing for him from the quarters; having united (them) he cuts off (portions); that is as when one cuts up what has been pierced.3 'That disease of yours, O Indra and Varuna, that is in the fire, that of yours I appease hereby', he says; verily he protects him from error in sacrifice. 'That disease of yours, O Indra and Varuna, that is in the twofooted cattle, that of yours I appease hereby', he says; so many are the waters, the plants, the trees, offspring and cattle on whom to live; verily does he free them for him from Varuna's noose.

² KS, and MS, have yourged. There is no need to accept an active sense here, though it is given by the comm. and supported by the active epithets.

Sayana renders 'as one extracting by pincers a dart in one's own body breaks it'. Bhask, has 'as one cuts off a diseased part'. The idea is that one first makes joints and then breaks up, after hastily reuniting.

PRAPĀTHAKA IV

ii. 4. 1. The1 gods, men, and the Pitrs were on one side, the Asuras, Raksases, and Picacas on the other. Of the gods the little blood they drew the Raksases smothered by the nights,2 and dawn dawned on them smothered and dead. The gods understood, 'Him who of us dies, it is the Raksases who kill.' They invited the Raksases; they said, 'Let us choose a boon; what [1] we win from the Asuras, let that be shared between us.' Then indeed did the gods conquer the Asuras, and having conquered the Asuras, they drove away the Raksases. The Raksases (saying), 'Ye have done falsely', surrounded the gods on all sides. The gods found a protector in Agni; they offered to Agni, the forward, a cake on eight potsherds, to Agni, the overcomer, to Agni with the face. In that they offered to Agni, the forward, the Raksases in front [2] they repelled thereby; in that (they offered) to Agni, the overcomer, the Raksases that were around they repelled thereby; in that (they offered) to Agni with the face, the Raksases behind were repelled thereby. That the gods prospered, the Raksases were defeated. He who has foes should in conflict sacrifice with this offering; he should offer to Agni, the forward, a cake on eight potsherds, to Agni, the overcomer [3], to Agni with the face. In that he offers to Agni, the forward, he repels thereby the foe who is superior tohim; in that (he offers) to Agni, the overcomer, he repels thereby (the foe) who is equal to him; in that (he offers) to Agni with the face, he repels. thereby the foe which is inferior to him. He repels the foe who is superior, he surpasses him who is like, the inferior does not equal him who knowing thus sacrifices with this offering.

ii. 4. 2. The gods and the Asuras were in conflict; the gods said, 'Let us hold on to the strongest of us'; they said to Indra, 'Thou art the strongest of us; let us hold on to thee.' He said, 'Three are these forms of my own that have strength; satiate them, and then shall ye overcome the Asuras.' They said, 'Name (them).' He said, 'This is that which frees from tribulation; this is that which drives away the foe; this is that which has ¹ Cf. KS. x. 7; MS. ii. 1. 11; BCS. xiii. 35; Āp. has no special mention. The verses are in ii. 5. 12: y and s, as and bb, ceand dd for the Agnis.

The nights are means as well as the time when. According to Sayana, the place where the blood fell is the object of the power' [1]. They offered to Indra, the freer from tribulation, a cake on eleven potsherds, to Indra, the driver away of the foe, to Indra, the powerful. In that they offered to Indra, the freer from tribulation, thereby they were freed from tribulation; in that they offered to Indra, the driver away of foes, thereby they drove away foes; in that they offered to Indra, the powerful, thereby they bestowed power upon themselves. They offered a cake on thirty-three potsherds; the gods are thirty-three; verily Indra takes hold of them in himself, for prosperity [2]. That was the highest victory that the gods won over the Asuras.1 He who has foes should in conflict sacrifice with this offering; to Indra, the freer from tribulation, he should offer a cake on eleven potsherds, to Indra, the driver away of the foe, to Indra, the powerful; by tribulation is he seized whose foe is superior to him; in that he offers to Indra, the freer from tribulation, he is freed thereby from tribulation; by foes is he beset, to whom one of his equals is superior, even [3] if no foe; in that (he offers) to Indra, the driver away of the foe, he smites away thereby his foes; in that (he offers) to Indra, the powerful, he bestows thereby power upon himself; he offers a cake on thirty-three potsherds; the gods are thirty-three; verily the sacrificer takes hold of them in himself, for prosperity. Thus is the sacrifice called 'the victorious'; he who knowing thus sacrifices with this offering wins thus the highest victory over his foe.

Rakşases' witcheraft. The sense is rather perhaps that the Raksases poisoned the blood of the wounds they caused.

Cf. KS. x. 10; MS. ii. 2. 5, 10; BÇS. xiii. 35. The verses are in ii. 5. 12; ec and ff, 9g and hh, ii and kk are pairs for the three forms of Indra.

ii. 4. 3. The 2 gods and the Asuras were in conflict; the Gayatri, grasping and taking their force, might, power, strength, offspring, and cattle, remained away; they reflected, 'Whomsoever of us she shall resort to, they shall become this (world)'; they hailed her in rivalry, 'O All worker', said the gods; 'O Deceiver', said the Asuras; neither did she resort to. The gods saw this formula, 'Thou art force, thou art strength, thou art might [1], thou are blazing, thou art by name the home of the gods, thou art all, of all life thou art everything, thou art of every life, the overcoming.' (So saying) the gods appropriated the force, might, power, strength, offspring, and cattle of the Asuras. Because the Gayatri remained away, therefore they style this offering the Gayatri; the Gayatri is the year, so the year remained away; because the gods thereby appropriated the force, might, power, strength [2], offspring, and cattle of the Asuras, therefore they style this offering the gatherer. He who has foes should in conflict sacrifice with this offering. To Agni, the gatherer, he should offer a cake on eight potsherds; this when cooked and put in place he should stroke with this formula; verily he appropriates the force, might, power, strength, offspring, and cattle of his foe; he prospers with himself, his foe is defeated.

ii. 4. 4. Prajāpati1 created offspring; they created went away from him; where they stayed, thence sprung the bean. Those he followed with Brhaspati;2 Brhaspati said, With this will I go3 before thee, then shall offspring have resort to thee.' He went before him; then indeed did offspring resort to Prajapati. For him who desires offspring he should offer this oblation of beans to Prajapati; verily he has recourse to Prajapati with his own share [1]; verily he produces offspring for him. Prajapati created cattle; they created went away from him; where they stayed, thence sprung the bean; those he followed with Pusan; Pusan said, 'With this do thou go before me; then shall cattle resort to thee.' 'Do thou go before me', said Soma, 'mine [2] is what grows on untilled (land).' 'Both of you shall I go before', he said; he went before them both; then indeed did cattle resort to Prajapati. For him who desires cattle should he offer this oblation of beans to Soma and Pūsan; verily he has recourse to Soma and Pusan with their own share: verily they produce cattle for him. Soma is the impregnator of seed, Pusan the producer of cattle; verily Soma bestows seed upon him, Pūṣan produces cattle.

ii. 4. 5. a O Agni come to us with kine; O drop, delight us with increase; Indra is the supporter in our homes.

> b Savitr, the thousandfold, May he delight us in our homes; May Pusan come, may wealth (be ours).

c May Dhātr give us wealth, The lord, the ruler of the world; May he favour us with a full (gift).

d Tvastr, the bull, the strong,
May he delight us in our homes,
With a thousand, with ten thousand.

Of. KS. r. 11; MS. ii. 2. 4; BQS. xiii. 36; Ap. has no special mention. The verses are in ii. 6, 11; u and v are for Prajapati, and w and x for Soma and Püşan.

For the construction cf. Delbrück, Altind. Synt. p. 84; Weber, Ind. Stud. xiii. 112.

Probably pro-stat is transitive in the sense 'stand before', 'precede'. So Delbrück renders it (op. cit. p. 291). The causative sense is conceivable but not likely.

b This appears in AV. vii. 17, 1; KS. xiii. 16; and, as regards the first Pada, in MS. iv. 12. 6. AV. has packate for edvanat, and all agree in dadhdae (in Bloomfield, Fedic Concordance, MS. is given as having daddae). It is found again in full at iii. 3. 11 g.

ii. 4. 6. He 1 who desires cattle should sacrifice with the Citra (offering); Citra is this (earth); in that in this (earth) all things are produced, thereby is this (earth) variegated (citra); he who knowing thus sacrifices with the Citra desirous of cattle is propagated with offspring, with cattle, with pairings. With the offering to Agni he strews,2 with that to Soma he impregnates seed, the seed impregnated Tvaştr develops into forms; there are (offerings) to Sarasvant and Sarasvatī; that is the divine pair; verily in the midst he bestows upon him a divine [1] pair, for growth, for propagation. There is an oblation to Sinīvālī; Sinīvālī is speech, speech is growth; verily he approaches speech and growth. The last is to Indra, and thereby there is a pair. Seven are these offerings, the tame animals are seven, the wild seven; the metres are seven, for the winning of both. Then he offers these oblations; these gods are the lords of growth; verily they bestow growth upon him, he grows with offspring and cattle; moreover in that he offers these oblations, (they serve) for support.

ii. 4. 7. a Thou " art connected with the Maruts, thou art the force of the Maruts, cleave the stream of the waters.

The verses are in iii. 1. II: a and b are for Agni; c and d for Soma; s and f or g and a for Tvastr; i and k for Sarasvati; l and m or n and o for Sarasvant; r and s for Indra. Then in ii. 4. 5 there are the Mantras for the Upahomas before the offering to Agni Svistakrt.

the action of a dark horse; see Hillebrandt, Ritualliteratur, p. 120. With a the sacrificer puts on a black garment with a black fringe; with b the priest summons the east wind, and drives away the west, with symbolic action; care the verses addressed to the wind; then on a black antelope skin Karira groats are deposited with d, and the ends of the skin are tied together with s.

The variants are jinea rived MS. and jinea rived KS. and probably the first is correct; cf. Wackernagel, Allind. Gramm. 1. 339; Macdonell, Ved. Gramm. pp. 33, 70. In that case the other forms are all based on the blunder jinea rived read as (1) jinear deaf and corrected to jinear deaf. In each of the successive Mantras jinea should be supplied. See also Oldenberg, Prolegomena, p. 357.

Of. KS. xi. 9; MS. ii. 4. 7, and for a, VS. xviii. 55. For the Brahmana see TS. ii. 4. 10. With a (first part) the black antelope skin is tied on to the eastern gusha of the cart (the part meant is unknown; Garbe says 'roof'), and if after a day and night rain follows the pinds are offered; if not the second part is so used, and if it fails the third, the skin being fastened to the middleand the back gadha respectively; b, c, and d accompany the Upahomas, when he binds on or offers the pindle; with a pot of unbaked clay and of black colour is set down in the Utkara, where also the cart stands, and filled with water, and if it breaks rain can be prognosticated; with s (second part) a black ewe tied to the cart is anointed and addressed: an omen is derived from its utterances; with f an offering is made in a Borrhavia procumbens; with g the black skin is shaken over the Ahavaniya: see ApCS. xix. 26. 4-27. 12, and cf. BCS. xiii. 38-40. If the actions accompanying a are unsuccessful in producing rain the dhamachad offerings are made (ii. 4. 10. 2).

4 This is RV. v. 53. 6, which, however, has parjányam for the more artificial parjányāā, which is probably caused by the attempt d From the ocean, O Maruts, ye make (the rain) to start, Ye make the rain to fall, O ye that are rich in moisture;
Your cows, O ye wondrous, fail not;
As we fix swiftly your chariots turned

As ye fly swiftly your chariots turned.'
c Set free the rain from heaven;

f Flood the earth,

Give to us of the divine water, Ruling loosen the water bag.

g The gods whose portion is in the sky, the gods whose portion is in the atmosphere, the gods whose portion is on earth, may they aid this sacrifice, may they enter this place, may they inhabit this place.*

ii. 4. 9. 'Thou's art connected with the Maruts, thou art the force of the Maruts', (with these words) he puts on a black garment with a black fringe: that is the hue of rain: verily becoming of like hue he causes Parjanya to rain. 'Stay, O Maruts, the speeding falcon', (with these words) he pushes back the west wind; verily he produces the east wind, to win the rains. He makes offering to the names of the wind; the wind rules the rain; verily he has recourse to the wind with its own share; verily it makes Parjanya rain for him. Eight offerings [1] he makes; the quarters are four, the intermediate quarters are four; verily from the quarters he makes the rain to move. He unites (them) on a black antelope skin; verily he makes the offering; he unites within the Vedi, for accomplishment. When the Yatis were being eaten, their heads fell away; they became Kharjūras; their sap rose upwards, they became Karīras; the Karīras are connected with Soma; the offering connected with Soma makes rain to move from the sky; in that there are Karīras 4 (in the sacrifice) [2], by means of an offering which is connected with Soma he wins the rain from the sky. With honey he unites (them); honey is the sap of the waters and the plants; verily it rains from the waters and the plants; verily also he brings down rain from the waters and the plants.

to construe the sentence with the preceding; cf. Oldenberg, Rgueda-Noten, i. 350.

1 This is RV, v. 55. 5 without variant.

MS. inserts sta after divibling and has pythiribhāgāh; it omits ti...orantu, and makes the rest all second persons.

Of. KS. xi. 10; MS. ii. 4. 8. For the Brahmana see TS. ii. 4. 7. The Brahmana ignores the verses (iii. 1. 11 t and u) used when the embers of the pings or the unbaked vessel are watched.

The groats of Karira are meant; they are united (mixed) with honey (midhupd) on the black skin. For Karira and Kharjura see Vedic Index, i. 189, 215; Oartel, Trans. Connecticus Acad. xv. 188. The reference to the monsoon from the east is clear. 'Gladdening, obedient', (with these words) he unites (them); verily he approaches them by their names; just as one may say, 'Come hither, N. N.', so by their names [3] he makes them move forward. 'Thou art the fetter of the strong horse; for rain I yoke thee', he says; the horse is strong, Parjanya is strong; becoming black as it were he rains; verily he unites him with his hue, to win the rains.

ii. 4. 10. 'O' gods having wealth, O gods granting protection, O gods drinking together', (with these words) he ties on; verily by means of the gods he daily seeks rain. If it should rain, so much 2 only should be offered; if it should not rain, on the next day he should offer an oblation. Mitra and Varuna are day and night, by day and night Parjanya rains, for by night or by day he rains; verily he has recourse to Mitra and Varuna with their own share; verily they [1] make Parjanya rain for him by day and night. To Agni, hiding his abode, he should offer a cake on eight potsherds, to the Maruts on seven potsherds, to Surva on one potsherd; Agni thence causes the rain to arise, the Maruts lead it out when produced; when yonder sun moves low " with his rays, then he rains; becoming a hider of his abode, as it were, he rains; these deities are the lords of rain; them he has recourse to with their own share; they [2] make Parjanya rain for him; even if he is not minded to rain yet he rains. 'Let free the rain from heaven; with waters fill the ocean', he says; verily these and yonder waters he unites; then with these he approaches yonder (waters). 'Thou art born of waters, first-born; thou art the might of the ocean', he says; that is according to the text. 'Flood the earth', (with these words) he offers in a Boerhavia procumbens; this of plants is that which wins rain, and thereby he causes rain to fall. 'The gods whose portion is in the sky', (with these words) he shakes the black antelope skin; verily to him these worlds become dear and desired.

ii. 4. 11. 'All' the metres are to be recited in this sacrifice', they say;

Cf. KS. xi, 10; MS. ii, 4, 8. The verses are in ii, 4, 8, and iii, 1, 11; s and so for Agni; bb and so for the Maruts (dd and so are alternatives); ff and gg for Sürya; hh-hk are three verses for offerings before that to Agni Sylstakrt.

² theat is of course loc.: the idea is that the coming of rain determines the amount of the ceremony to be gone through: the cake is only offered if there is no rain for three days.

3 KS, areda with the same sense: the sun approaches earth.

* BR. takes this as acc, and a variant of vergabhu; but the comm. is followed by OB, and MW. in taking it as a loc., the vessel of the sacrifice being meant. For h and bh, see Wackernagel, Allind. Gramm. j. 251; Macdonell, Ved. Gramm. p. 52.

Cf. KS. xii. 4; MS. ii. 4. 4, 5. The verses are in fii. 2. 11; a and b are the Dhāyyās in the Sāmidhenīs; c is the last of the Sāmidhenīs; d and c are the Puronuvākyā and Yājyā for Indra and Viṣṇu; f and g are the Samyājyās for Agni Sviṣṭakṛt; see ApÇS. xix. 27. 15-21, and cf. BCS. xiii. 41, 42.

the Kakubh is the strength of the Tristubh, the Usnih of the Jagati; in that he repeats the Usnih and the Kakubh, thereby he wins all the metres. The Usnih is the Gayatri; the four syllables over are fourfooted cattle; just as cake is over cake, so it is with the syllables which are over the verse; if he were to close with a Jagati 1 [1], he would end the sacrifice; he closes with a Tristubh, the Tristubh is power and strength; verily he establishes the sacrifice on power and strength, he does not end it. 'O Agni, three are thy strengths, three thy abodes', with this (verse) containing the word 'three' he closes, for similarity of form: that which has three constituents is the whole of the sacrifice; for every desire it is employed, for the sacrifice is employed for all desires. He who is practising witchcraft should sacrifice with that of three constituents; that which has three constituents is the whole of the sacrifice [2]; verily with the whole of the sacrifice he bewitches him, and lays him low. With the same (offering) should he sacrifice who is practised against, that which has three constituents is the whole of the sacrifice; verily he sacrifices with the whole of the sacrifice, and he who practises witcheraft does not lay him low. With the same (offering) should he sacrifice who is going to sacrifice with a thousand; verily he produces and gives (it).2 He who has sacrificed with a thousand should sacrifice with the same (offering); he goes to the end of cattle [3] who sacrifices with a thousand; Prajapati created cattle; he created them with (the offering) of three constituents; he who knowing thus sacrifices, desirous of cattle, with (the offering) of three constituents, creates cattle from the very source whence Prajapati created them; and the thousand resorts to him. He becomes a prey to the gods who having said, 'I shall sacrifice', does not sacrifice; he should sacrifice with (the offering) of three constituents; (the offering) of three constituents [4] is the whole of the sacrifice; verily he sacrifices with the whole of the sacrifice, and does not become a prey to the gods. The cake is on twelve potsherds; these are three (sets of) four potsherds, to bring about the three. There are three cakes, these worlds are three; (verily they serve) to win these worlds.3 Each one above the other is larger, for so as it were are these worlds. The middle one is made of barley, that is the form of the atmosphere; (verily it serves) for prosperity. He cuts off from all (the cakes) as he sets them up without making a failure. He gives gold; verily he wins brilliance [5]; he gives the silken garment; verily he wins cattle; he gives a cow; verily he wins his prayers; gold is the colour of the Saman, the silken garment of the formulae, the cow of the praises and rejoicings; verily he wins all these colours.

¹ The comm. is perplexed and suggests that the Jagati is really a Gäyatri (viz. the verse d juhota dususyate given as the last Sämidheni in ÇB. i. 4. 1. 39, and quoted in TB. iii. 5. 2. 3 but not in the Sanhità),

ii. 4. 12. Tvaştr,1 his son slain, offered Soma excluding Indra. Indra desired an invitation to the rite,2 but he did not invite him, (saying), 'Thou hast slain my son.' He made a disturbance of the sacrifice, and forcibly drank the Soma. The remains of it Tvastr cast upon the Ahavanīya (fire), saying, 'Hail! wax great, Indra's foe.' While (the fire) was flaming upwards to strike, just then of itself it stayed; whether a so much was before [1], or so much was over the fire, he sprang up alive and came into union with Agni and Soma. He grew on all sides an arrow(shot), he enveloped these worlds. Because he enveloped these worlds, therefore is Vrtra Vrtra. Indra feared him, and Tvastr too; Tvastr dipped his bolt for him; the bolt was fervour; he could not restrain it. Visnu [2] was another god; he said, 'Visnu, come hither; we will grasp that by which he is this world. Visnu deposited himself in three places, a third on the earth, a third in the atmosphere, a third in the sky, for he was afraid of his growth. By means of the third on earth Indra raised his bolt, aided by Visnu. He said, 'Hurl it not at me; there is this [3] strength in me; I will give it to you.' He gave it to him, he accepted it, and (saying), 'Thou didst further me', gave it to Visnu. Visnu accepted it (saying), 'Let Indra place power (indriya) in us.' By means of the third in the atmosphere Indra raised his bolt, aided by Visnu. He said, 'Hurl it not at me; there is this [4] strength in me; I will give it to you.' He gave it to him; he accepted it, and (saying), 'Twice hast thou furthered me', gave it to Visnu. Visnu accepted it (saying), 'Let Indra place power in us.' By means of the third in the sky Indra raised his bolt, aided by Visnu. He said, 'Hurl it not at me; I will give to thee that by which I [5] am this world.' He said, 'Yes.' (He replied), 'Let us make a compact; let me enter thee.' 'If thou dost enter me, in what way wilt thou enjoy me?' 'I will kindle thee; I will enter thee for thine enjoyment', he answered. Vrtra entered him. Vrtra is the belly; hunger is man's enemy; he who [6] knows this slavs the enemy hunger. He gave it to him; he accepted it, and (saying), 'Thrice hast thou furthered me', gave it to Visnu. Visnu accepted it being the remains of the oblation; cf. MS. ii. 4. 3. The comm. thinks it refers to the fire but that is less easy, indracotrur as a Bahuvrihi means 'having Indra as a fee', and so is a mistake for indra-citrur 'foe to Indra' as a Tatpurusa. CB. L. 6. 3. S has a different version; cf. Oertel, Trans. Connecticut Acad. xv. 189.

The sense seems as given above, the subject

(saying), 'Let Indra place power in us.' In that thrice he gave and thrice he accepted, that is the reason of the threefold character of the threefold. In that Viṣnu aided him and he gave (it) to Viṣnu, therefore the offering belongs to Indra and Viṣnu. Whatever there is here he gave to him, the Rees, the Sāmans, the Yajuses. A thousand he gave to him; therefore there are a thousand gifts.

ii. 4. 13. The 1 gods were afraid of the warrior on his birth. While still within (the womb) they fettered him with a bond. The warrior thus is born fettered; if he were born not fettered he would continually slay his foes. If one desire of a warrior, 'May he be born not fettered, may he continually slay his foes', one should offer for him the offering for Indra and Brhaspati, for the warrior is connected with Indra, Brhaspati is the holy power (Brahman); verily by the holy power (Brahman) he frees him from the bond that fetters him. The sacrificial present is a golden bond; verily manifestly he frees him from the bond that fetters him.

ii. 4. 14. a He is born ever new;

The banner of the days goeth before the dawns. He appointed their portion to the gods as he advanceth; The moon extendeth length of days.

PRAPATHAKA V

The New and Full Moon Sacrifices

ii. 5. 1. Vicvarupa, son of Tvastr, was the domestic priest of the gods, and the sister's son of the Asuras. He had three heads, one which drank Soma, one Sura, and one which ate food. He 5 promised openly the share to the gods, secretly to the Asuras. Men promise openly the share to every one; if they promise any one secretly, his share is indeed promised. Therefore Indra was afraid (thinking), 'Such an one is diverting the sovereignty (from me).' He took his bolt and smote off his heads. (The head) which drank Soma [1] became a hazelcock; (the head) which drank Sura a sparrow; (the head) which ate food a partridge. He seized with his hand the guilt of slaying him, and bore it for a year. Creatures called out upon him, 'Thou art a Brahman slayer.' He appealed to the earth, 'Take a third part of my guilt.' She said, 'Let me choose a boon. I deem that I shall be overcome through digging. Let me not be overcome by that.' He replied, 'Before [2] a year is out it will grow up for thee.' Therefore before the year is out the dug-out portion of earth grows up again, for that was what she chose as a boon. She took a third of his guilt. That became a natural fissure; therefore one who has piled up

See RV. i. 115. 1. The Pratika is given in il. 2, 12, 1; 3, 8, 2, and the full text in i. 4, 43, 1. The reason why this verse here is given in full, while i. 50, 1 (p. 187, n. 10) is not, is unintelligible, unless it be that the two (e and p) are alternative Yajyas to n as Puronuvakya.

The sense here adopted is suggested by Oertel's version of JB. ii. 158, where the text is less ambiguous (yazmā u ha vai bhāyah kāmayate tasmai parekṣam vadati). The plural here is the generic plural: there is another case below in sambharanti, which is not a reference to polyandry.

a fire-altar and whose deity is faith should not choose 1 a natural fissure, for that is the colour of guilt. He appealed to the trees, 'Take a third part of my guilt.' They said, 'Let us choose a boon. We deem that we shall be overcome through pruning [3]. Let us not be overcome by that.' He replied, 'From pruning shall more (shoots) spring up for you.' Therefore from the pruning of trees more (shoots) spring up, for that was what they chose as a boon. They took a third part of his guilt, it became sap; therefore one should not partake of sap, for it is the colour of guilt. Or 2 rather of the sap which is red or which comes from the pruning one should not partake [4], but of other sap at will. He appealed to a concourse of women, 'Take the third of my guilt.' They said, 'Let us choose a boon; let us obtain offspring from after the menses; let us enjoy intercourse at will up to birth.' Therefore women obtain offspring from after the menses, and enjoy intercourse at will up to birth, for that was what they chose as a boon. They took a third of his guilt, it became (a woman) with stained garments; therefore one should not converse with (a woman) with stained garments [5], one should not sit with her, nor eat her food, for she keeps emitting the colour of guilt. Or rather they say, 'Woman's food is unguent, and therefore one should not accept (from her) unguent, but anything else (can be accepted) at will.' The son born of intercourse with (a woman) with stained garments is accursed; (the son born) of intercourse 3 in the forest is a thief; (the son born) of intercourse with a (woman) who turns away is shamefaced and retiring; (the son born) of intercourse with a woman bathing is fated to drown; (the son born) of one who [6] anoints herself has a skin disease; (the son born) of one who combs her hair is bald and feeble; (the son born) of one who anoints (her eyes) is blind; (the son born) of one who cleans her teeth has dirty teeth; (the son born) of one who cuts her nails has bad nails; (the son born) of one who spins is a eunuch; (the son born) of one who weaves ropes is unrestrained;5 (the son born) of one who drinks from a leaf is drunken; (the son born) of one who drinks from a mutilated (vessel) is mutilated. For three nights he should keep a vow and should drink from his hand or from a perfect vessel, to guard his offspring.6

As a place of sacrifice, says the comm., who gives as an alternative 'one should not stand' in such a cleft. For iriga see Fedic Index, i. 80.

ii. 5. 2. Tvastr, his son being slain, offered Soma excluding Indra. Indra desired an invitation to the rite, but he did not invite him; (saying) 'Thou hast slain my son.' He made a disturbance of the sacrifice, and forcibly drank the Soma. The remains of it Tvastr cast upon the Ahavanīya (fire), (saying), 'Hail! wax great, Indra's foe.' In that he cast it (avartayat), Vrtra is Vrtra; in that he said, 'Hail! wax great, Indra's foe', therefore [1] Indra became his foe. He 2 sprang into life and came into union with Agni and Soma. He grew on all sides an arrow(shot), he enveloped these worlds. Because he enveloped these worlds, therefore is Vrtra Vrtra. Indra feared him. He ran up to Prajāpati, (saying), 'A foe has sprung up for me.' He dipped his bolt and gave it to him, (saying), 'Slay with it.' He went against (him) with it. Agni and Soma said, 'Hurl it not [2]; we are within.' 'Ye are mine', he replied, 'come to me.' They asked for a share; he gave them at the full moon this offering for Agni and Soma on eleven potsherds. They said, 'We are bitten all round, and cannot come.' Indra produced from himself cold and fever heat; that was the origin of cold and fever heat. Him who knows thus the origin of cold and fever heat [3] neither cold nor fever heat slays. By them he led him on, and as he gaped Agni and Soma went forth from him. Then expiration and inspiration deserted him; skill is expiration, intelligence is inspiration; therefore one who gapes should say,3 'Skill and intelligence (remain) in me'; verily he places expiration and inspiration in himself and lives all his days. He, having called off the gods from Vrtra offered at the full moon the oblation to the Vrtra slayer; they slay him at the full moon [4], but make him swell at the new moon; therefore verses are uttered at the full moon referring to the slaying of Vrtra, at the new moon referring to his increase. Having performed the oblation to the Vrtra slayer, he took his bolt and again went against (him). Sky and earth said, 'Hurl it not; he rests in us two.' They said, 'Let us choose a boon.' 'May I be adorned ¹ Cf. ii. 4. 12. 1, 2, and for § 5 MB. iii. 5. 6. 1. This section still deals with the normal form of the new and full moon offerings.

This is too condensed to be intelligible without if. 4. 12, whence it appears that the remains of the oblation became alive and united with Agni and Soma. abhisambhi seems rather to indicate union than overpowering, as Caland (Altindische Zauberei, p. 127) prefers to take it. Cf. Oertel, Trans. Connecticut Acad. xv. 189.

i.e. the Anuvākyās at the two rites refer to the different phases of the situation. The comm. illustrates by citing Indrecytrāni jaāghanat (QQS. vl. 7. 10 = RV. vl. 56, 2; viii. 17. 8 where, however, jighnats is read); train rājetā vṛtrahā (RV. 1. 91. 5); and kavir vipreņa vāryāhs (RV. viii. 44, 12); carāhāyāms vacovidah (RV. i. 91, 11). See also TB. iii. 5. 6. 1; MS. iv. 10, 1.

The omission of it is natural here, as the two say so much together, and then each says its own wish; the effect of the omission is to bring out clearly the joint utterance.

with the Naksatras', said yonder (sky); 'May I be adorned with variegated things', said this (earth). Therefore yonder (sky) is adorned with the Naksatras, this (earth) with variegated things. He who knows thus the boon of sky and earth [5] attains a boon. Indra thus impelled by these two slew Vrtra. The gods having slain Vrtra said to Agni and Soma, 'Bear the offering for us.' They said, 'We two have lost our brilliance, our brilliance is in Vrtra.' They said, 'Who is there to go for it?' 'The cow', they 1 said, 'The cow is the friend of all.' She said [6]. 'Let me choose a boon; ye shall feed off both when they are in me.' The cow brought the (brilliance); therefore they feed off both things that are in the cow; ghee indeed is the brilliance of Agni, milk the brilliance of Soma. He who knows thus the brilliance of Agni and Soma becomes brilliant. The theologians say, 'What is the deity of the full moon (rite)?' He should reply, 'Prajapati; by means of it he established his eldest son, Indra.' Therefore 2 they establish their eldest sons with wealth.

ii. 5. 3. When Indra had slain Vrtra, his enemies threatened him. He saw this enemy-dispelling (oblation) to be offered subsequently at the full moon. He offered it, and with it drove away his enemies. In that the enemy-dispelling (oblation) is to be offered subsequently at the full moon, the sacrificer by it drives away his enemies. Indra, having slain Vrtra, lost the gods and his power. He saw the (offering) to Agni on eight potsherds at the new moon, and the curds for Indra [1]. He offered it, and by it he won the gods and his power. In that at the new moon there is (an offering) to Agni on eight potsherds, and curds for Indra, the sacrificer wins by it the gods and power. When Indra had slain Vrtra, his power and strength went into the earth; then 4 the plants and roots were born. He ran up to Prajāpati, (saying), 'Now that I have slain Vrtra, my power and strength [2] have gone into the earth; then the plants and roots have been born.' Prajapati said to cattle, 'Collect it for him.' The cattle collected it from the plants in themselves; they milked it. In that they collected it, has the collected oblation (sāmnāyya) its name; in that they milked it, has fresh milk its name (pratidhuk). 'They have collected it; they have milked it; but it rests not in me', tit here is ambiguous, for the sense may equally well be 'the plants—become that

An offering of milk taken from a cow on the new moon and made sour and then mixed next day with other milk and offered in that condition; cf. CB, i. 6. 4. 9 seg.; Haug, Aitareya Brūhmana, ii. 443; Eggeling, SBE, xii. 178, n. 4.

he said. 'Make it ready' for him' [3], he replied. They made it ready for him; they made power and strength rest in him; verily the ready (milk) has its name (crta). 'They have collected it; they have milked it; they have made it ready; but it does not impel me', he said. 'Make it curds for him', he replied. They made it curds for him; that impelled (ahinot) him; verily curds (dadhi) has its name. The theologians say, 'One should offer curds first, for curds is made first' [4]. One should disregard that and offer ready (milk) first; verily one places power and strength in him and later impels him by curds; and he proceeds in order (of production). If he curdles it with Pūtikā plants or with bark, that is fit for Soma; if with jujubes, that is for the Raksases; if with rice grains, for the All-gods; if with rennet, for men; if with curds, that has Indra. He curdles it with curds [5] that it may have Indra. He curdles the remains of the Agnihotra, for the continuity of the sacrifice.3 Indra having slain Vrtra went to a great distance, thinking, 'I have sinned.' The gods sought to start him. Prajapati said, 'He who first finds him will have the first share.' The Pitrs found him; therefore an offering is made to the Pitrs on the day before. He approached the new moon night; the gods met him, (saying), 'Our treasure to-day at home [6] dwells', for Indra is the treasure of the gods, and that is why the new moon night has its name (amä-väsya), 'home dwelling'). The theologians say, 'What is the deity of the Samnayya?' 'The All-gods', he should reply, 'for so the All-gods won that as their share.' Or rather he should reply, 'Indra, for it was in healing Indra that they won it.'

ii. 5. 4. The 'theologians say,' He would indeed offer the new and full moon (sacrifices) who should offer them with Indra.' At the full moon there is the subsequent offering of the enemy-dispelling (oblation), and by it the full moon has Indra. There are curds for Indra at the new moon; verily the new moon has Indra. He who knowing thus offers the new and full moon sacrifices, offers them with Indra, and day after day it becomes better for him who has so sacrificed. What the gods did at the sacrifice, the Asuras did. The gods [1] saw this offering, one on eleven potsherds for Agni and Vișnu, an oblation for Sarasvatī, an oblation for Sarasvant;

The argument is that the curds is made the night before and so in point of time curds comes first. The reply is to refer the action to logical and causal priority.

The Agnihotra is followed by the Darça sacrifice.

after performing the full moon (sacrifice) they offered this. Then the gods prospered, the Asuras were defeated. He who has enemies should offer this offering after performing the full moon (sacrifice). With the full moon (sacrifice) he hurls the bolt at his enemy, with (the offering) to Agni and Visnu he appropriates the gods and the sacrifice of his enemy, his pairing cattle with (the offerings) to Sarasvatī and Sarasvant. Whatever he has, all that [2] he appropriates. One should sacrifice at the full moon, if one has enemies, not at the new moon; having slain one's enemy one does not cause him to grow again. He who desires cattle should sacrifice with the Sākamprasthāyīya. The man to whom they bring (anything) in small measure is not himself pleased, and does not give to another. But he, to whom they bring in large measure, is himself pleased, and gives to another. One should offer in full and large measure; Indra then being pleased delights him with offspring and cattle. He offers with a wooden vessel, for an earthenware one does not hold the offering. It is of Udumbara wood [3]; the Udumbara is strength, cattle are strength; verily by strength he wins for him strength and cattle. One should not sacrifice to Mahendra, if one is not prosperous. The prosperous are three; a learned (Brahman), a village headman, and a warrior. Their deity is Mahendra. He who sacrifices beyond his own deity loses his own deity, and does not obtain another, and becomes worse. For a year one should sacrifice to Indra, for the vow extends not beyond the year; verily [4] his own deity, being sacrificed to, kindles him with prosperity and he becomes richer. After the year he should offer a cake on eight potsherds to Agni, lord of vows; verily for a year Agni, lord of vows, causes him to take up the vow who has slain his foe (vrtra). Thereafter he may sacrifice at will,1 ii. 5. 5. No 2 one who is not a Soma sacrificer should offer the Sāmnāyya. For the milk of him who is not a Soma sacrificer is imperfect, and if one who is not a Soma sacrificer offers the Sāmnāyya he is a thief and does wrong, and (his milk) is poured forth in vain. A Soma sacrificer only should offer the Sāmnāyya. Soma is milk, the Sāmnāyya is milk; verily with milk he places milk in himself. The moon deprives him of offspring and cattle, and makes his enemy wax great on whose sacrifice when offered it rises in the east [1]. He should divide the rice grains into three parts; the mean size he should make into a cake on eight potsherds for Agni, the giver, the largest he should give as a mess to Indra, the bestower, the smallest (he should give) as a mess in boiled (milk) to Viṣṇu

Cipivista.1 Agni thus generates offspring for him; Indra gives it increase; Visnu is the sacrifice, and Cipi cattle; verily on the sacrifice and cattle he rests. He should not offer twice [2].2 If he were to offer now with the first he would make a failure with the second; if with the second now, he would make a failure with the first; there is no offering at all and no sacrifice, for that cause a son is born shamefaced and retiring. One offering only should one make; a valiant son is born to him. One should disregard this and offer twice. With the first (offering) one grasps the mouth of the sacrifice, and sacrifices with the second. Verily one wins the gods with the first, power with the second; verily one conquers the world of the gods [3] with the first; the world of men with the second; he performs several forms of sacrifice. This offering is called 'the friendly'; for him there is in this world prosperity on whom the moon rises in the west after he has sacrificed on that day. He who desires heaven should sacrifice with the Dakṣāyana sacrifice. On the full moon he should offer the Samnayya; on the new moon he should sacrifice with clotted curds for Mitra and Varuna. On the full moon (the Soma) is pressed for the gods; during this half-month it is pressed forth for them, and a cow for Mitraand Varuna is to be slaughtered for them at the new moon. In that [4] he sacrifices on the day before, he makes the sacrificial enclosure. In that he drives away the calves, he metes out the seat and the oblation holder. In that he sacrifices, he produces with the gods the pressing day. He drinks for the half-month Soma in carouse with the gods. In that he sacrifices at the new moon with clotted curds for Mitra and Varuna, the cow which is slaughtered for the gods becomes his also. He mounts upon the gods in truth who mounts upon their sacrifice [5]. Just as a great man who has attained (fortune) desires (and does), so he does. If he misses the mark he becomes worse; if he does not, he remains the same. One who desires distinction should sacrifice with it, for this sacrifice has a razor edge, and swiftly he becomes holy or perishes. His vow is: he shall not speak untruth; he shall not eat meat; he shall not approach a woman; they shall not clean his raiment with cleansing stuff; for all these things the gods do not do.

sacrifices with Soma, rests in the chosen resting-place of the gods which is conspicuous for its chariot (tracks). The new and the full moons are the limbs and joints of the year; he who knowing thus offers the new and the full moon (sacrifices) thus unites the limbs and joints of the year. The new and the full moon are the eyes of the year; he who knowing thus offers the new and the full moon (sacrifices) thus sees with them along the world of heaven [1]. The new and the full moon are the striding of the gods; he who knowing thus offers the new and the full moon (sacrifices) steps in the striding of the gods. The new and the full moon are the path on which the gods fare; he who knowing thus offers the new and the full moon (sacrifices) mounts the path on which the gods fare. The new and the full moons are the bay steeds of the gods; he who knowing thus offers the new and the full moon (sacrifices) carries to the gods with their two bay steeds [2] the offering. The new and the full moon (sacrifices) are the mouth of the gods; he who knowing thus offers the new and the full moon (sacrifices) manifestly sacrifices in the mouth of the gods. He who offers the new and the full moon sacrifices possesses an oblation holder.2 He offers the Agnihotra morn and evening, he offers the new and the full moon (sacrifices); on every day (the Soma) of those who have oblation holders is pressed. By him who knowing thus offers the new and the full moon (sacrifices) regarding himself as possessing an oblation holder, everything is given as on the strew. The gods [3] could not find the suitable day for the sacrifice. They purified the new and full moons; the new and the full moon (sacrifices) are these pure and sacrificial (days). He who knowing thus offers the new and the full moon (sacrifices) offers them as pure and sacrificial. One should not approach a woman on the new moon or the full moon night; if one were to do so, one would be impotent. The nights of the half-month were the wives of King Soma; of these he did not approach the new moon night and the full moon night [4]. They grasped him about, and illness seized him. 'Illness has seized the king'; that (saying) is the origin of the 'king's evil'. In that he became worse, that is (the origin) of the 'bad illness'; because he got it from his wives, that is (the origin) of the 'wife's disease' (Jāyenya); him who knows thus the origin of these illnesses, these illnesses do not visit. He ran up to these two in reverence; they said, 'Let us choose a boon; let us be the appointers of portions for the gods [5]; from us let the gods be sacrificed to.' Therefore of the series of nights it is on the new and the full moon night that the gods are sacrificed to; for they are the appointers of portions for the gods. Men appoint portions to him who knows thus. Creatures slew hunger, man at once, the gods at the half-month, the Pitrs in a month, trees in a year. Therefore day by day men desire food, at the half-month the gods are sacrificed to, every month offering is made to the Pitrs, in a year trees produce fruit. He who knows thus slays the enemy, hunger.

ii. 5. 7. The 1 gods could not rest on the Re or the Yajus. On the Saman only could they rest. He makes the noise 'Him'; verily he makes the Saman. He makes the noise 'Him'; where the gods rested, there he sets them in motion. He makes the noise 'Him'; this is the yoking of speech, He makes the noise 'Him'; thus the sacrificers produce offspring. He repeats the first (verse) thrice, the last thrice; verily he ties the end of the sacrifice [1] so that it may not slip. He repeats (it) continuously, for the continuity of the breaths and of food, and for the smiting away of the Raksases. The first he repeats is connected 2 with the Rathantara (Sāman). this world is connected with the Rathantara; verily he conquers this world. He divides it thrice; these worlds are three; verily he conquers these worlds. The last he repeats is connected with the Brhat (Saman); yonder world is connected with the Brhat; verily he conquers yonder world. 'Forward [2] your viands', he repeats, a verse which has not any indication (of its deity) and (therefore) is addressed to Prajapati. Prajāpati is the sacrifice; verily he grasps the sacrifice as Prajāpati, 'Forward your viands', he repeats; viands are food; verily he wins food. 'Forward your viands', he repeats; therefore seed is deposited in front.

With this chapter the consideration of the Hote's part in the new and full moon sacrifices commences, and goes on to ii. 5. 11. 3. See also ii. 6. 7-10, and for the Mantras TB. iii. 5. The chapter deals with the Samidhenis or kindling-verses, eleven in number. See TB. iii. 5. 1. 1-2. 1; KB. iii. 2; ÇB. i. 4. 1. 1-21; ÇÇS. i. 4. 5. 7; ĀÇS. i. 2. 1-22; ĀpÇS. ii. 10 seq.; BÇS. i. 15, and cf. Hillebrandt, Das altindische Neu-und Vollmondsopfer, pp. 34 seq.; Eggeling, SBE. xii. 102 seq.

The recitation by the Hotr of the Samidhents is preceded by the utterance of the words him bhur bhurah war om (ACS. i. 2. 3), and so brought into connexion with the Saman. Therefore numbers here no doubt is to be explained, as it is by the comm., viz. that this is a verse sung sometimes to the Rathantara tune. He, however, is inconsistent; see note 4.

According to the comm. thus, (1) first Pada; (2) first half-verse; (8) second half-verse and first half-verse of the next.

This must be the sense as in rdiamari above. But the comm. Insist that not the last but the third verse is meant, and that it is a reference to the word bride in that verse. But this is absurd; see ii. 5. 8. 1. For the physiological remark at the end of the paragraph, see below v. 2. 10, 2.

'O Agni, come hither for the feast', he repeats: therefore offspring are born at the back. 'Forward your viands', he repeats [3]; 'viands' are the months, 'heavenwards' are the half-months, 'rich in the oblation' are the gods, 'full of butter' is the cow, 'he goes to the gods' (that is) the sacrifice, 'desirous of favour' is the sacrificer. 1 'Thou art this, thou art this'. (with these words) he wins the dear abode of the sacrifice. If he desire for a man, 'May he live all his days', he should repeat for him 'Forward your viands', and then continuously the next half-verse of 'Agni, come hither to the feast' [4]. Verily by expiration does he make steadfast his inspiration, and he lives all his days. He, who knows the elbow of the Samidhenis, puts his enemy in his elbow.3 He joins the half-verses; this is the elbow of the Samidhenis; he who knows thus puts his foe in his elbow. The Samidhenis were brought out by Rsi after Rsi; if they were not connected together, they would go away from the sacrificer's offspring and cattle. He unites the half-verses; verily he connects them together, and being so connected and secured they yield him all his desires.

ii. 5. 8. Without a Saman there is no sacrifice. O Agni, come hither for the feast, he says; this is the character of the Rathantara. Thee with the kindling-sticks, O Angiras, he says; this is the character of the Vamadevya. The great and powerful one, O Agni, he says. This is the character of the Brhat. In that he repeats this Trea, he makes the sacrifice have Samans. Agni was in yonder world, the sun in this; these worlds were disturbed [1]. The gods said, Let us change them about. (Saying), O Agni, come hither for the feast, they placed Agni in this world, and (saying), The great and powerful one, O Agni, they placed the sun in yonder world. Then indeed these worlds became calm. In that he repeats (it) thus, (it serves) for the calming of these worlds; these worlds become calm for him who knows thus. He repeats fifteen Samidhenis [2]. The nights of the half-month are fifteen; the year is made up of half-months. There are three hundred and sixty syllables in the prá vo vájá abhidyavah havismanto ghrtácyá deváň jigüti numnasóm,

The half-verse is added as it were to the first verse and then a pause comes. But of course the half-verse belongs also to the next verse and makes the recitation continuous.

s arateau &r is a curious phrase, and the comm. explains it that it means 'make small' (i.e. one ell as compared with a man of four ells). But that can hardly be, and the phrase may be a reminiscence of the regrettable practice of youth of putting the head of a rival under one's arm, catching it between the lower and upper arm, and 'punching it'. For the size of the Indian aratai of Fleet, JRAS, 1912, p. 231, n. 2; Vedic Index, ii. 512.

⁴ This chapter concludes the treatment of the Samidhenis, all of which it mentions or refers to. Cf. TB. iii. 5, 2, 1-3; CB. i. 4, 1, 22-29; CCS. i. 4, 8-13; ACS. i. 2, 7; ApCS. ii, 12, 6.

Samidhenis; there are as many nights in the year; verily by syllables he obtains the year. Nrmedha and Paruchepa had a theological dispute (and said), 'Let us generate fire in the dry wood (to see) which of us two is the more of a theologian.' Nrmedha spoke; he generated smoke. Paruchepa spoke; he generated fire. 'O Rsi', he said, [3], 'seeing that our knowledge is equal, how didst thou generate fire and not I?' 'I know the character of the Samidhenis', he replied. The character of the Sămidhenis is the quarter-verse which is repeated with the word 'ghee' in it.1 'Thee with the kindling-sticks, Angiras', he says; verily he generates light in the Samidhenia. They are feminine in that they are Re (verses), they are feminine in that they are Gayatri (verses), they are feminine in that they are Samidhenis. He repeats a verse 2 with the word 'Male' in it [4]. By it he gives them a husband, makes them possess Indra, and mates them. Agni was the messenger of the gods, Uçanas Kāvya of the Asuras. They went to question Prajāpati; he turned away (from Uçanas) (with the words),3 'Agni as messenger we choose.' Then the gods prospered, the Asuras were defeated. The man for whom, knowing thus, he repeats, 'Agni as messenger we choose', prospers himself, his enemy is defeated. He repeats a verse with the word 'imperishable'; ' verily by it he causes his enemy to perish [5]. 'The flaming locked, him we adore', he says;5 that is purifying; verily with it he makes pure the sacrificer. 'Thou art lit, O Agni, worshipped', he says; e verily he places around a barrier that may not be climbed. If he were to add anything further, it would be just as when (a libation) falls outside the barriers. There are three Agnis, the oblation bearer of the gods, the bearer of the offering of the Pitrs, the guardian of the Asuras. They repeat, 'Me will he choose, me' [6]. 'Choose ye the bearer of the oblation', he says; 1 let him choose him who is of the gods. He chooses one of a Rsi's family; 8 verily he departs not from the connexion, (and so it serves) for continuity. He chooses, beginning at the further end, in order of descent; therefore the Pitrs drink after men in order of descent, beginning at the further end.

ii. 5. 9. 'O Agni,' thou art great', he says, for Agni is great. 'O Brahman',

On this, cf. Wober, Ind. Stud. x. 69 seq.; Eggeling, SBE. xii. 115, n. 1. Agni is invoked as the ancestral Hoty, usually with three or four ancestral names. In KB. iii. 2 it is clearly a neuter, 'descent' of the sacrificer. Here it is probably mase.

F This chapter deals with the formulae called he says, for he is a Brahman. 'O Bharata',1 he says, for he bears the sacrifice to the gods. 'Kindled by the gods', he says, for the gods kindled him. 'Kindled by Manu', he says, for Manu kindled him after the gods. 'Praised by the Rsis', he says, for the Rsis praised him. 'Rejoiced in by sages', he says [1], for learned people are sages. 'Celebrated by the poets', he says, for learned people are the poets. 'Quickened by the holy power (Brahman)', he says, for he is quickened by the holy power (Brahman). 'With ghee offering', he says, for ghee is his dearest offering. 'Leader of the sacrifices', he says, for he is the leader of the sacrifices. 'Charioteer of the rites', he says, for he is the chariot of the gods. 'The Hotr unsurpassed', he says, for no one surpasses him [2]. 'Surpassing, bearing the oblation', he says, for he surpasses all. 'The mouth dish, the ladle of the gods', he says, for he is the ladle of the gods. 'The bowl from which the gods drink', he says, for he is the bowl from which the gods drink. 'O Agni, like a felly the spokes, thou dost surround the gods', he says, for he surrounds the gods. If he were to say, 'Bring hither the gods to the pious sacrificer', he would produce an enemy for him [3].2 'Bring hither the gods to the sacrificer', he says; verily with that he makes the sacrificer to grow great. 'O Agni, bring Agni hither, bring Soma hither', he says; verily he summons the gods in order. Bring hither the gods, O Agni; and sacrifice to them with a fair sacrifice, O Jatavedas', he says; verily he quickens Agni, and quickened by him he bears the oblation to the gods. 'Agni the Hotr' [4], he says; Agni is the Hotr of the gods; him he chooses who is the Hotr of the gods. 'We are', he says; verily he makes himself attain reality. 'Fair be to thee the deity, O sacrificer', he says; verily he invokes this blessing (on him). If he were to say,3 'Who hast chosen Agni as Hotr', he would surround the sacrificer with Agni on both sides, and he would be liable to perish. The ladle has the sacrificer for its deity, the Upabhrt the enemy as its deity [5]. If he were to say two 4 as it were, he would produce an enemy for him. 'Take, Adhvaryu, the spoon (sruc) with ghee', he says; verily by it he Nigadas, consisting in this case of the Pravara Mantra, invoking Agni as the ancestral Hoty (cf. ii. 5. 8, n. 8), and a series of Nivida, all of which are found in TB. iii. 5. 3. 1; 4. 1. See also CB. 1. 4. 2. 2-17; 5. 2. 1-3; KB. iii. 2; CCS. i. 4. 14-5. 7; 6. 16; ACS. i. 2. 27, 8. 1-6; MCS. v. 1. 4. 12. The Pravara and the Nivida may be compared with the text in Schefielowitz, Die Apokryphen des Ravada, pp. 136 seq.

I That this is really a tribal epithet is practically certain (see Fedic Index, ii. 97); but the comm. all agree in rendering it as here.

This formula is found often elsewhere; TS. i. 2, 12, 3; VS. v. 12; KS. ii. 9; iii. 5; xxv. 6; MS. i. 2, 8; iii. 8, 5.

³ This is in ACS, i. 4, 10; CCS, i. 6, 15, but not in TB. The reference to Agni on both sides alludes to the beginning of the series of invocations in TB, iii. 5, 4, 1 with Agnir hour vette Agnis.

causes the sacrificer to wax great. 'Pious', he says, for he aids the gods. 'With all boons', he says, for he aids all. 'Let us praise the gods worthy of praise; let us honour those worthy of honour; let us sacrifice to those worthy of sacrifice', he says. Those worthy of praise are men; those worthy of honour are the Pitrs; those worthy of sacrifice are the gods; verily he sacrifices to the deities according to their portions.

ii, 5, 10, In1 the case of a Rajanya let him repeat the Treas2 thrice; three other sorts of men are there besides the warrior, the Brahman, Vaicya and Cudra; verily he makes them obedient to him. He should repeat fifteen (Sāmidhenīs) in the case of a Rājanya; the Rājanya is fifteenfold; verily he makes him find support in his own Stoma. Let him surround it with a Tristubh; 3 the Tristubh is power, the Rajanya sacrifices in desire of power; verily by the Tristubh he secures power for him. If he desires [1], 'May there be splendour', he should surround it with a Gayatri, ' the Gayatri is splendour; verily there is splendour. He should repeat seventeen for a Vaicya; the Vaicya is seventeenfold; verily he makes him find support in his own Stoma. He should surround it with a Jagati; 5 cattle are connected with the Jagati, the Vaicya sacrifices in desire of cattle : verily by the Jagati he secures cattle for him. He should repeat twentyone 6 for one who desires support; the Ekavinça is the support of the Stomas; (verily twenty-one serve) for support [2]. He should repeat twenty-four for one who desires splendour; the Gayatri has twenty-four syllables, splendour is the Gayatri; verily by the Gayatri he secures splendour for him. He should repeat thirty of for one who desires food; the Virāj has thirty syllables, the Virāj is food; verily by the Virāj he secures food for him. He should repeat thirty-two to for one who desires support; the Anustubh has thirty-two syllables, the Anustubh is the support of the metres; (verily thirty-two serve) for support. He should repeat thirty-six for one who desires cattle; the Brhati has thirty-six syllables, cattle are connected with the Brhati; verily by the Brhati he

¹ This chapter gives a series of optional recitations of the SamidhenIs to suit particular classes or wishes. Cf. CB. L 6. 5. 10 seq.

The first and second Samidhenis are thrice repeated and so make two Treas: the third consists of sain Faruna, viz. TB. iii. 5. 2. 3 (cf. RV. vii. 12, 3).

^{*} That is the verse train Varuna.

The last of the Sămidhenis d judota decaspita. The splendour comes from the Gâyatri par excellence, tát Savitiir.

⁵ The seventeen are made up by adding the Dhâyyā verses before v. 10, namely RV. iii. 27, 5 (= TB. iii. 6, 1, 3) and iii. 27, 5 (iii. 27, 5 (iii. 27, 5). Cf. CB. i. 4. I. 37; Eggeling, SBE xii. 115, n. 1. The Vaigya and the Saptadaça Stoma have the same origin, the middle part of Prajāpati's body; so the warrior and the Pañcadaça Stoma are connected; see TS. vii. 1, 1, 4 seq. The Jagati is the verse RV. v. 28, 2 according to the comm. and it serves as the Paridhānīyā verse.

The comm, contents himself with the following explanation of the various numbers secures cattle for him [3]. He should repeat forty-four for one who desires power, the Tristubh has forty-four syllables, the Tristubh is power; verily by the Tristubh he secures power for him. He should repeat forty-eight for one who desires cattle; the Jagatī has forty-eight syllables, cattle are connected with the Jagatī; verily with the Jagatī he secures cattle for him. He should repeat all the metres for one who makes many sacrifices, for all the metres are won by him who makes many sacrifices. He should repeat indefinitely to win that which is not definite.

ii. 5. 11. The 1 thread 2 is worn around the neck for men, over the right shoulder for the Pitrs, over the left for the gods. He puts it over the left shoulder; verily he makes the mark of the gods. He repeats standing, for standing he speaks more audibly. He repeats standing, to conquer the world of heaven. He sacrifices sitting; verily he finds support in this world. In that he repeats in the Krauñca 3 note, that is connected with the Asuras, in the low note, that is connected with men, in the intermediate note, that is connected with the gods. One should repeat in the intermediate note, to secure the gods. Clever indeed [1] were 4 the Hotrs of old; therefore the ways were held apart, and the paths did not conflict. One foot should be within the sacrificial altar, the other outside; then he repeats, to hold the ways apart and to avoid conflict of the paths. Then does he win the past and the future, the measured and the unmeasured does he win, domestic and wild cattle both does he win [2]; verily also the world of the gods and the world of men he conquers.

quoted from the Sampredayavids: after v. I two verses ide agnim (probably RV. iii. 27. 2; cf. TB. ii. 4. 2. 4; MS. iv. 11. 2; KS, xl. 14) may be inserted; then there come the verses beginning with Samidheni v. 2; then three Treas took agns (RV, vi. 16, 13), then eleven verses commencing again again (cf. MCS, v. 1, 2. 6; perhaps RV. i. 12. 2); then eight verses beginning RV. iii. 27. 5; adding that if forty-eight are to be made up three more must be taken from the RV. The comm, explains this by saying that two verses are added after Samidheni v. 1, then the rest of the Samidhenis down to v. 9 inclusive; then as many as are needed of the verses laid down, while the Mimańsakas put only the Dhayya verses before v. 10, and the others at the end, but before the Paridhaniyas, which shows pretty clearly that the mode of recitation was a mere guess.

This chapter deals with certain rules for the dress and placing of the feet of the Hotr, and then with the sprinkling of butter on the kindling-sticks by the Adhvaryu. Cf. CB. i. 4. 2. 18, 19; 5. 8-11. The last sections (8-9) thus form part of the section dealing with the Adhvaryu's duties and belong with ii. 5. 1-6; 6. 1-6.

Tilak (Orion, pp. 145 seq.) argues that a cloth not a thread is meant, quoting the Mimänsä view. But it is difficult to be certain that this is correct, for the traditional version may well be accurate, and it suits better the expressions pracise and upweife.

³ Probably a high one. Cf. Caland and Henry, L'Agnistoma, pp. 461 seq., for the later system. In JUB. i. 37 there are given the mandrd, ghosiny upabdimati, one which cinkhayann ira prathayann ira he sings, the ucci and the krauñed. Cf. CU. ii. 22. 1.

* For the agr., as in i. 5, 2, 1; 7, 5; iii. 5, 19, 2, see Delbrück, Altind. Synt. p. 286.

The gods having repeated the Sāmidhenīs could not see the sacrifice. Prajapati in silence performed the sprinkling of the butter. Then indeed did the gods see the sacrifice. In that he silently sprinkles, (it serves) to light up the sacrifice. Verily also he anoints the kindling-sticks. He who knows thus becomes soft. Verily also he delights them. He delights in offspring and cattle [3] who knows thus. If he were to sprinkle with one (verse), he would delight one; if with two, (he would delight) two; if with three, he would make (the offering) go beyond (all others).1 He sprinkles (repeating the verse) in the mind, for what is imperfect is made perfect by mind. He sprinkles across so as not to make a failure. Speech 2 and mind disputed; 'I will bear the offering to the gods', speech said; 'I to the gods', mind said. They went to question Prajapati; he said [4], Prajāpati, 'Thou art the messenger of mind, for what one thinks of in the mind, one utters in speech'. 'Then assuredly they will not sacrifice to you with speech', said (speech). Therefore in the mind they offer to Prajāpati, for Prajāpati is, as it were, the mind; (verily it serves) to obtain Prajapati. He rubs the enclosing-sticks; verily he purifies them. (He rubs) the middle one thrice; the breaths are three; verily he conquers the breaths. (He rubs) the southern one thrice; these worlds are three [5]; verily he conquers these worlds. (He rubs) the northern one thrice; three are the paths leading to the gods; verily he conquers them. Thrice he fans (the fire); the worlds of the gods are three; verily he conquers the worlds of the gods. They make twelve; the year has twelve months; verily he delights the year; verily also he brings up the year for him, to gain the world of heaven. He sprinkles; the world of heaven is as it were secret [6]; verily he makes the world of heaven resplendent for him. He sprinkles straight, for the breath is as it were straight. He sprinkles continuously, for the continuity of the breaths and of food, and for the smiting away of the Raksases. If he desire of a man, 'May he be likely to perish', he should sprinkle crookedly for him; verily he leads his breath crookedly from him, and swiftly he perishes. sprinkling is the head of the sacrifice, the ladle is the body [7]. Having sprinkled, he anoints the ladle; verily he places the head of the sacrifice on its body. Agni was the messenger of the gods, Daivya of the Asuras; they went to question Prajāpati. Prajāpati spake to a Brahman 3 (saying),

The rule is to be one verse to one Aghära or sprinkling. For this operation cf. ApÇS. ii. 12, 7 seq.; BÇS. i. 15; KÇS. i. S. 41 seq.; and see Hillebrandt, Das altindische Neu- und Vollmondsopfer, pp. 80, 86; Eggeling, SBE. xii. 124 seq.

This is not easy: Bhask, followed by Sayana, takes brāhmaņām as an adj. applying to Agni. But that will hardly do, and the expression vi brāhā seems to be addressed to a Brahman who decides in favour of Agni and the gods in his version of digrāvaya. The alternative is to try to find

'Explain the phrase, "Make announcement", 'Hearken to this, O ye gods', he said; 'Agni the god is the Hotr', (he said). He chose him of the gods. Then the gods [8] prospered, the Asuras were defeated. The man, who knows thus and for whom they chose his list of ancestors, prospers himself, his enemy is defeated. If a Brahman and a non-Brahman have a litigation, one should support the Brahman; if one supports the Brahman, one supports oneself; if one opposes the Brahman, one opposes oneself; therefore one should not oppose a Brahman.

replies by the two, Agni and Daivya. The want of a parallel is tantalizing.

¹ This refers to the choosing of the Hotr by the Adhvaryu, while in ii. 5. 8 there is the choice by the Hotr of Agni. The difference according to the comm. is that the order of ancestors is reversed, i.e. the list runs Jamadagni, Ürva, Appavans, Cyavana, Bhrgu, and not as in that case from the remote ancestor downwards. For this Pravara cf. ApCS. ii. 16. 5; BCS. i. 15; MCS. i. 3. 1. 26; KCS. iii. 2. 7; Hillebrandt, op. cii. p. 88; Eggeling, op. cii. 115, n. 1; 133.

It is not absolutely certain that auhi-brü here means 'decide in favour of 'rather than 'speak in favour of ', but it is probable, cf. Delbrück, Allind. Synt. p. 441; if so, the immunities of Brahmans were already high; cf. Vedic Index, ii. 88.

Since his great light shineth like the sun;
He who overcame Puru in battle,
Hath shone forth, the heavenly guest, propitious for us.

I sacrifice to thee, I cast forward my prayer to thee, That thou mayst be invoked at our invocation; Thou art like a well in the desert, Thou, O Agni, to the man eager to worship, O ancient king [4].

The New and Full Moon Sacrifices

ii. 6. 1. He 8 offers to the kindling-sticks; verily he wins spring among the seasons. He offers to Tanunapat; verily he wins the hot season. He offers to the oblations; verily he wins the rains. He offers to the sacrificial strew; verily he wins autumn. He offers with the cry of 'Hail!'; verily he wins the winter. Therefore in winter animals over which the cry of 'Hail!' is raised perish. He offers to the kindling-sticks; verily he wins the dawns of the goddesses. He offers to Tanunapat; verily he wins the sacrifice [1]. He offers to the oblations; verily he wins cattle. He offers to the sacrificial strew; verily he wins offspring. He takes (the oblation) from the Upabhrt. The oblation is brilliance, the sacrificial strew offspring; verily he places brilliance in offspring. He offers with the cry of 'Hail!'; verily he wins speech. They make up ten, the Virāj has ten syllables, the Virāj is food; verily he wins food by the Virāj. He offers to the kindling-sticks; verily he finds support in this world. He offers to Tanunapat [2]; verily in the sacrifice and in the atmosphere he finds support. He offers to the oblations; verily in cattle he finds support. He offers to the sacrificial strew; verily he finds support in the paths that lead to the gods. He offers with the cry of 'Hail!'; verily he finds support in the world of heaven. So many are the worlds of the gods; verily in them in order he finds support. The gods and the Asuras contended as to these worlds. The gods by the fore-sacrifices drove the Asuras away from these worlds; that is why the fore-sacrifices [3] are so called. He for whom knowing thus are offered the fore-sacrifices, drives his enemy away from these worlds. He offers stepping near, for conquest. He who knows the pairing of the foresacrifices is propagated with offspring, with cattle, with pairings. He offers to the kindling-sticks as many, to Tanunapat as one, and that makes a pair. He offers to the kindling-sticks as many, to the sacrificial strew as one, and that makes a pair. That is the pairing of the fore-sacrifices. He who knows thus [4] is propagated with offspring, with cattle, with pairings. These deities were not sacrificed to by the gods; then the Asuras were fain to harm the sacrifice. The gods divided the Gayatri, five syllables in front and three behind. Then the sacrifice was protected, and the sacrificer. In that the fore- and after-sacrifices are offered, protection is afforded to the sacrifice and to the sacrificer, for the overcoming of the enemy. Therefore a covering 1 is larger in front and smaller behind. The gods thought that the sacrifice must be completed (in the fore-sacrifice) before the Raksases [5] with the cry of 'Hail!' They completed it with the cry of 'Hail!' in the fore-sacrifices. They split the sacrifice who complete it with the cry of 'Hail!' in the fore-sacrifices. Having offered the foresacrifices he sprinkles the oblations, for the continuity of the sacrifice; then verily he makes the oblation, and then he proceeds in order. The foresacrifices are the father, the after-sacrifices the son; in that having offered the fore-sacrifices he sprinkles the oblations, the father makes common property with the son [6].2 Therefore they say, who know it or who know not, 'How is it the son's only, how is the father's common?' That which spills when the fore-sacrifices are offered is not really spilt. The Gayatri conceives through it, and produces offspring and cattle for the sacrificer. ii. 6. 2. The 3 two portions of the oblation are the eyes of the sacrifice. In that he offers the two portions of the oblation, he inserts the two eyes of the sacrifice. He offers in the front place; therefore the eyes are in front. He offers evenly; therefore the eyes are even. By Agni [‡] This is taken by the comm. as referring to the van and rear of an army : it may be a 'shield', but it is not certain.

The comm. takes this as referring to the fact that the son's earnings are his own, the father shares them with the family, and this seems correct. Sayana also notes that the son keeps his secretly, i.e. perhaps his ownership was precario, not of right; the parallel to Roman law is striking and justifies us in accepting the view of the comm. The verse katha &c., is not in the Vedic Concordance.

This chapter deals with the two Ajyabhagas. See the Mantras in TB. iii. 5. 6. 1-7. 6; ef. KS. xx. 15; MS. iv. 10. 1, 3; CB. i. 6. 3; 7. 2; and for the Sūtras, ApCS. ii. 18; BCS. i. 16; Hillebrandt, pp. 102 seq.; MCS. v. 1. 2. 8 (ef. v. 1. 1. 21; 8. 8; 5, 25).

the sacrificer discerns the world of the gods, by Soma the world of the Pitrs; in the north part he offers to Agni, in the south to Soma, for these worlds are thus, as it were, to illumine these worlds. Agni and Soma are the kings of the gods [1]. They are sacrificed to between the gods, to separate the gods. Therefore men are separated by the king. The theologians say, 'What is it that the sacrificer does in the sacrifice to support both those animals which have incisors on one side only and those which have incisors on both?' When he has repeated a Re, he makes an offering of the portion of the oblation with the jusana 1 formula; by that means he supports those with incisors on one side only. When he has repeated a Rc, he makes an offering of the sacrificial food (havis) with a Re: by that means he supports those with incisors on both sides. The Puronuvākyā contains the word 'head'; 2 verily he makes him head of his peers [2]. He offers with a verse containing the word 'team' (niyut);3 verily he appropriates (ni-yu) the cattle of his enemy. Keein Sātyakāmi said to Keçin Darbhya, 'The seven-footed Çakvarî I shall use for thee at the sacrifice to-morrow, by whose strength one defeats the enemies that have arisen and those that shall be, by the first half of whose strength the ox feeds, by the second half the cow.' The Puronuvākyā is marked in front; verily he defeats the enemies that have arisen; the Yajya is marked behind [3]; verily he defeats the enemies that shall be. The Puronuvākyā is marked in front; verily he places light in this world; the Yājyā is marked behind; verily he places light in yonder world. Full of light become these worlds to him who knows thus. The Puronuvākyā is marked in front; therefore the ox feeds with the first half. The Yājyā is marked behind; therefore the cow feeds with the second half. Him who knows thus these two enjoy. The oblation is a bolt, the portions of the oblation are a bolt [4], the Vasat call is a bolt; thus forges he a threefold bolt and hurls it at his foe, so as not to make a failure. He utters the Vasat call in anger, to lay low his foe. The See TB. iii. 5. 6. 1. The comm. takes if yeld above as plur. and Weber (Ind. Stud. xiii. 112) goes so far as to criticize the sense here, but the comm.'s idea is absurd.

Whitney (AJP. xiv. 184) decides for the formasa first person; Böhtlingk (BKSGW. 1893, pp. 7, 8) maintains that it is a second person as the comm. takes it and as the normal grammar assumes it to be. It is certainly better to adopt the view of Whitney, though it cannot be asserted that the other view is certainly incorrect. It is clear from the text, which accepts as a noun proyekidse but does not refer to se, that the formation was not understood. See also Liebich, Pasini, pp. 52-55, with Whitney, PAOS. Apr. 1893, p. xvi; Böhtlingk, L.c. A verse is marked by the mention of the deity.

s apagirya must have some such sense as this; as contrasted with agarya, 'assenting'. Bhāsk., however, takes it as = saying ye yajāmahe (TS. i. 6. 11).

Puronuvăkyā is the Gāyatrī, the Yājyā the Triṣṭubh; verily he makes the ruling class dependent on the priestly class; therefore the Brahman is the chief. The chief he becomes who knows thus. He proclaims him with the Puronuvākyā, leads him forward with the Yājyā, and makes him go with the Vaṣaṭ call. He takes him with the Puronuvākyā, he gives him with the Yājyā, and [5] establishes him with the Vaṣaṭ call. The Puronuvākyā has three feet; these worlds are three; verily he finds support in these worlds. The Yājyā has four feet; verily he wins fourfooted cattle. The Vaṣaṭ call has two syllables, the sacrificer has two feet; verily afterwards¹ he finds support in cattle. The Puronuvākyā is the Gāyatrī, the Yājyā the Triṣṭubh, and this is the sevenfooted Çakvarī. Whatever the gods were fain to do by it, that they were able to do; he who knows thus can do whatever he is fain to do.

ii. 6. 3. Prajāpati 2 assigned the sacrifices to the gods. He placed in himself the oblation. The gods said to him, 'The oblation is the sacrifice; let us have a share in it.' He said, 'Let them offer to you the portions of the oblation, let them pour out (a layer), let them sprinkle (it).' Therefore they offer the portions of the oblation, they pour out (a layer), and sprinkle (it). The theologians say, 'For what reason are the other offerings worn out, but the oblation fresh?' He should reply, Because it is Prajāpati's [1], for Prajāpati is of the gods the fresh one.' The metres ran away from the gods (saying), 'We will not bear the offering, if we have no share.' They kept for them (the offering) divided into four parts, for the Puronuvākyā, the Yājyā, the deity, the Vasat call. In that he offers (the offering) in four parts, he delights the metres, and they delighted by him carry the offering to the gods. The Angirases 3 were the last to go hence to the world of heaven. The Rsis came to the place of sacrifice; they [2] saw the sacrificial cake creeping about, having become a tortoise. They said to it, 'Be firm for Indra; be firm for Brhaspati: be firm for the All-gods.' It did not become firm. They said to it, 'Be firm for Agni.' It became firm for Agni. In that (the cake) for Agni on eight potsherds is unmoved at the full and at the new moon, (it serves) to conquer the world of heaven. They said to it, 'How hast thou been left?' 'I have not been anointed', he said, 'just as an axle not anointed [3] goes wrong, so I have gone wrong.' After anointing it above, he anoints it below, to gain the world of heaven.

^{&#}x27; According to the comm. this is to show that he has cattle over to provide milk, &c., for the priests.

He spreads (the cake) on all the fragments; so many cakes does he conquer in yonder world. That which is burnt belongs to Nirrti, that which is not cooked to Rudra, that which is cooked to the gods. Therefore one should cook it, without burning it, for the gods. He covers it with ashes; therefore the bones are clothed with flesh. He covers it with the bunch of grass; therefore [4] the head is covered with hair. The offering which is cooked without being sprinkled has fallen from this world, but has not reached the world of the gods. He sprinkles it before covering it; verily he makes it go among the gods. If one fragment were lost, one month of the year would be omitted, and the sacrificer would perish. If two were lost, two months of the year would be omitted, and the sacrificer would perish. He counts before covering, to guard the sacrificer [5]. If it be lost, he should make an offering on two potsherds to the Acvins, and on one potsherd to sky and earth. The Acvins are the physicians of the gods; verily by them he heals it. Then is offered an offering on one potsherd to sky and earth; in them is lost what is lost; verily in them he finds it, (and it serves) for support.

ii. 6. 4. (Saying 1) 'On the impulse of the god Savitr thee', he takes the sword, for impelling. 'With the arms of the Acvins', he says, for the Acvins were the Adhvaryus of the gods. 'With the hands of Pusan', he says, for restraint. 'Thou art a hundred-edged, of the tree, slayer of the foe', he says; verily he sharpens the bolt, being about to hurl it at his enemy. He throws away the grass with a Yajus.2 The earth is the size of the altar; verily he deprives his enemy of so much of that [1]. Therefore they do not deprive one who has no share. He throws it away thrice; these worlds are three; verily he excludes him from these worlds. He throws it silently a fourth time; verily he excludes him from the unmeasured. He uproots it; verily what of it is impure he cuts off. He uproots it; therefore the plants perish. He cuts the root; verily he cuts the root of the enemy. If dug too deep, it has the Pitrs for its deity; 3 so much does he dig as is measured [2] by Prajapati as the mouth of the sacrifice. He digs until (he reaches) support; verily he causes the sacrificer to reach support. He makes it higher on the south; verily he makes it the form of the sacrificial ground. He makes it full ¹ This chapter deals with the altar construction and explains the Mantras in i. S. 1; 1. 9. Cf. KS. xxv. 4; xxxi. 8; KapS. xxxix. 1; xlvii. 8; MS. iv. 1. 10; TB. iii. 2. 9; CB. i. 2. 4. 4-5. 20.

See note on i. 1. 9. The meaning is that grass is cut to the accompaniment of a Yajus and thrown on the rubbish hesp (utkars).

The Pitrs are in all things opposed to the gods, and so the digging must not be too deep on any account. The next phrase seems to mean that it is to be as deep as the head of the sacrificer, Prajäpati being the ideal sacrificer.

of loose earth; loose earth is offspring and cattle; verily he makes him full of offspring and cattle. He performs the second drawing of a boundary. The earth is the size of the altar; verily having excluded his enemy from so much of it, he performs the second drawing of a boundary for himself. Cruelly he acts [3] in making an altar. (With the words) 'Thou art the holder, thou art the self holder', it is made smooth, for healing. He places the sprinkling waters; the waters are Raksas-slaying; (verily they serve) for slaying the Raksases. He places them in the path made by the sword, for the continuity of the sacrifice. He should think of any one whom he hates; verily does he inflict trouble

ii. 6. 5. The theologians say, Thou hast sprinkled the offerings with water; but the waters with what?' 'With the holy power (Brahman)', he should say, for verily he sprinkles the offerings with water, and the waters with the holy power (Brahman). He sprinkles the kindling-wood and the sacrificial strew; verily he makes it pure. He sprinkles the altar, the altar was rough, hairless, and impure; verily he makes it pure. 'To the sky thee, to the atmosphere thee, to earth thee', (with these words) he places the sacrificial strew and sprinkles it [1]; verily he sprinkles it for these worlds. Cruelly indeed does he act in that he digs. He pours down the waters, for healing. He takes the bunch in front; verily he makes it the chief. He takes so much as is measured by Prajapati as the mouth of the sacrifice. He spreads the sacrificial strew, the sacrificial strew is offspring, the altar is the earth; verily he places offspring on the earth. He strews it so as not to be very discernible; 3 verily he makes him not very discernible by offspring and cattle [2]. He puts the bundle over the sacrificial strew, the strew is offspring, the bundle the sacrificer; verily he makes the sacrificer superior to the non-sacrificer. Therefore the sacrificer is superior to the non-sacrificer. He puts (grass 4) between, for separation. He anoints it; verily he makes it into an offering and causes it to go to the world of heaven. He anoints it in three places; these worlds are three; verily he anoints it for these worlds. He does not break off (its edges); if he were to break them off, it would not go aloft for the sacrificer. He pushes it upwards as it were [3], for the world of heaven is upwards as it were. He depresses it; verily he brings down

This chapter comments on the Mantras in i. 1. 11. 1; ef. KS. xxv. 5; KapS. xxxiz. 2; MS. iii. 8. 5, 6; TB. iii. 3. 6. 2-8; CB. i. 3. 3. 2-10; 8, 3. 11-20.

rain for him. He should not put forward the points too much; if he were to do so, there would be a violent torrent 1 to destroy the Adhvaryu. He should not throw it (so that the roots are) in front.2 If he were to do this, he would thrust the sacrificer from the world of heaven. He puts it forward (with its points) to the east; verily he makes the sacrificer go to the world of heaven. He should not spread (the bunch) in all directions. If he were to spread (it) in all directions [4], a daughter would be born to him. He strews it upwards,3 for upwards is as it were connected with a man; verily a male child is born to him. If he were to smooth it with the sword or the poking-stick, that would be his ruin. He smooths it with his hand, for the protection of the sacrificer. The theologians say, 'What in the sacrifice is the sacrificer?' 'The bundle' (is the reply). 'Where in it is the world of heaven?' 'The Ahavaniya (fire)' he should reply. In that he puts the bundle on the Ahavaniya, he makes the sacrificer [5] go to the world of heaven. The sacrificer is rent in that they smooth the bundle; he throws the strew along after it,4 for calming. The Adhvaryu has no support, and he is liable to be seized by shivering. (With the words), 'Thou art firm (dhruva)', he strokes it; the Dhruva is this (earth); verily he finds support in it, and shivers not. 'Has he gone, O Agnidh?' he says. If (the Agnidh) were to say, Agni has gone?' he would make Agni go into the fire, and exclude the sacrificer from the world of heaven. So he should say only 'Has he gone?' Verily he makes the sacrificer go to the world of heaven.

ii. 6. 6. Agni had three elder brothers; they perished while carrying the offering to the gods. Agni was afraid, 'Thus indeed will this one fall on misfortune.' He ran away, and entered the waters. The gods sought to start him up. The fish proclaimed him, and he cursed it, 'At

The comm. varies between thinking a violent rain and a disease are meant by this phrase, evidently thinking of atistra, 'diarrhea', for which cf. Bloomfield, SBE. tili. 238, 234; Jolly, Medicin, pp. 74-76, for he actually uses the phrase atistring tram, explaining it as atpadatisyena varyanam. The idea of a disease is no doubt the correct one, for the torrent of rain and the diarrhoea are clearly the same. Cf. p. 528, n. 1.

The force of prity asyst seems, as the commsays, to be 'throw it so as to turn over and thus have the roots in front', which is forbidden: the roots are to be behind; see n. S.

points are elevated and the root down below.

Not the whole barhis but only a stalk of it, apparently that referred to in CB. i. S. 3. 19, which is taken out of the prasture itself.

The sacrificer is the presters, and the sacrificer goes to the world of heaven when the presters goes to the Ahavaniya.

This deals with the Upancuyaja, or silent sacrifice, and the offering to Agni Sviştakrt; see KS. xxv. 7; KapS. xxxix. 5; MS. iii. 8. 6; ÇB. i. 2. 3. 1; 3. 3. 18-17; 6. 3. 27, 28; 7. 3. 20. The parallels are unusually close. See also TS. vi. 2. 8. 5; ApCS. ii. 19-21; BCS. i. 16, 17; Hillebrandt, pp. 111 seg.

pleasure may they slay thee, since thou hast proclaimed me.' So they slay the fish at pleasure, for he is cursed [1]. They found him; they said, 'Come to us, and carry the offering for us.' He said, 'Let me choose a boon; whatever of the offering when it is taken (in the ladle) falls outside the enclosing-sticks, let that be the share of my brothers.' Therefore whatever of the offering when it is taken falls outside the enclosingsticks is their share; verily by it he delights them. He puts the enclosingsticks around, to smite away the Raksases. He makes them touch [2], so that the Raksases may not creep through. He puts none in front, for the sun rises in front and smites away the Raksases. He places the two kindling-sticks upright, for upwards they smite away the Raksases. (He places) one with a Yajus, the other in silence, to make a pair. He places two, the sacrificer has two feet, for support. The theologians say, 'He indeed would be a sacrificer who should be the stronger for a failure in the sacrifice.' (The words), 'To the lord of earth 1 hail! To the lord of the world, hail! To the lord of creatures [3] hail!' he should pronounce over the spilt (offering). Thus by a failure in the sacrifice he becomes stronger, for he delights more gods (than usual). There is sameness in the sacrifice, in that there are two sacrificial cakes (offered) in order. Between them he offers the silent sacrifice, to break the sameness and to make a pair. Agni was in yonder world, Yama in this. The gods said, 'Come, let us interchange them'; with food the gods invited Agni [4], with the kingdom the Pitrs Yama; therefore is Agni the food-eater of the gods, Yama the king of the Pitrs; he who knows thus obtains the kingdom and food. To him they gave that share which they cut off for Agni Svistakrt. In that he cuts off a share for Agni Svistakrt, he gives Rudra a share. He cuts off one in each case, for Rudra is one as it were. He cuts off from the north part, for this is Rudra's [5] quarter; verily he appeases Rudra in his own quarter. He sprinkles it twice, to make it divided into four.2 The former offerings are cattle, Agni is Rudra here; if he were to pour over the former offerings, he would give Rudra cattle, and the sacrificer would be without cattle. He offers leaving the former oblations aside, to protect the cattle.

Mitra and Varuna said, 'We are able to produce the cow.' Then they set the cow in motion. Wherever she stepped, there ghee was pressed out; therefore she is called ghee-footed; that is her origin. 'The Rathantara is invoked with the earth', he says [1]. The Rathantara is this (earth); verily he invokes her with food. 'The Vamadevya is invoked with the atmosphere', he says. The Vamadevya is cattle; verily he invokes cattle with the atmosphere. 'The Brhat is invoked with the sky', he says. The Brhat is connected with food; verily he invokes food with the sky. 'The seven Hotras' are invoked', he says; verily he invokes the Hotras. 'The cow is invoked with the bull', he says [2]; verily he invokes a pair. 'The friend food is invoked', he says; verily he invokes the Soma drink. 'It is invoked; ho!' he says; verily he invokes the self, for the self is the best of those invoked. He invokes food, food is cattle; verily he invokes cattle. He invokes four, for cattle are four-footed. 'Offspring of Manu', he says, for Manu first saw her [3]. 'Ghee-footed', he says. Because ghee was pressed out of her foot, therefore he says thus. 'Of Mitra and Varuna', he says, for Mitra and Varuna set her in motion. 'The Brahman, god made, is invoked', he says; verily he invokes the Brahman. 'The divine Adhvaryus are invoked, the human are invoked', he says; verily he invokes the gods and men. 'Who shall help this sacrifice and make the lord of the sacrifice prosper', he says [4]; verily he invokes a blessing for the sacrifice and the sacrificer. 'Sky and earth are invoked', he says; verily he invokes sky and earth. 'Born of yore, the righteous', he says, for they were born of yore and are righteous. 'Divine, with gods for children', he says, for they are divine and have gods for children. 'Invoked is this sacrificer', he says; verily he invokes the sacrificer. 'Invoked in the highest sacrifice, invoked in the greater offering, invoked in the divine abode' [5], he says. The highest sacrifice is offspring, the greater offering is cattle, the divine abode is the world of heaven. (With the words), 'Thou art this; thou art this', he invokes the dear abode of the sacrifice. 'All that is dear to it is invoked', he says; verily not vainly does he invoke.

This chapter describes the eating of the offering, and the Pracitra offering, or food portion. Cf. CB. i. S. 1. 14, 15; vii. S. 2. 9; 4. 8-15; KB. vi. 13, 14; CCS. i. 10. 2, 3; ĀCS. i. 7. 2; ĀpCS. iii. 1, 2; BCS. i. 18; Hillebrandt, pp. 128 seq.

his desires of cattle, for no one else can grant him his desire of cattle. 'Thee offered to the lord of speech I eat', he says; verily he delights speech with a share. 'Thee offered to the lord of the Sadas I eat', he says, for completion.1 (The food) is divided in four; what is divided in four is the offering, what is divided in four is cattle; if the Hotr were to eat it, the Hotr would [1] experience misfortune; if he were to offer it in the fire, he would give the cattle to Rudra, and the sacrificer would be without cattle. 'Thee offered to the lord of speech I cat', he says; verily secretly does he offer it. 'Thee offered to the lord of the Sadas', he says, for completion. They 2 eat; they eat at a suitable moment; he gives a sacrificial gift; at a suitable moment he gives a gift. They cleave the sacrifice [2], if they eat in the middle. They purify it with water; all the gods are the waters; verily they connect the sacrifice with the gods. The gods excluded Rudra from the sacrifice; he pierced the sacrifice, the gods gathered round it (saying), 'May it be right for us.' They said, 'Well offered will this be for us, if we propitiate him.' That is why Agni is called the 'well offerer' (svistakrt). When it was pierced (by him) [3] they cut off (a piece) of the size of a barleycorn; therefore one should cut off (a piece) the size of a barleycorn. If one were to cut off more, he would confuse that part of the sacrifice. If he were to make a layer and then to sprinkle, he would make it swell on both sides.3 He cuts it off and sprinkles it; there are two operations; the sacrificer has two feet, for support. If he were to transfer it (to the Brahman) crosswise, he would pierce the unwounded part of the sacrifice; he transfers it in front; verily he transfers it in the proper way. They transferred it for Pusan [4]. Pusan having eaten it lost his teeth; therefore Pusan has pounded food for his share, for he has no teeth.6 The gods said of him, 'He has lost 6 (his teeth), he is not fit for the offering.' They transferred it to Brhaspati. Brhaspati was afraid, 'Thus indeed will this one 7 fall on misfortune.' He saw this Mantra; 'With the eye of the sun I gaze on thee', he said, for Weber (Ind. Stud. xiii. 108) wishes to take this from ruj, comparing for t, before a following t, and dedbhydm, vii. 4. 9. 1, and sompit to, i. 2. 7 a.

The usual cohormatic consists of an upastarana or layer placed in the Juhü from the Dhruvā, two portions of cake, and a sprinkling (abhighāraņa): here there are none of these, save one cutting and one sprinkling; cf. Eggeling, SBE. xii. 174, n. 1; 192, n. 1.

the eye of the sun harms no one [5]. He was afraid, 'It will harm me as I take it.' 'On the impulse of the god Savitr, with the arms of the Açvins, with the hands of Pūṣan I take thee', he says; verily, impelled by Savitr, he took it with the holy power (Brahman) and with the gods. He was afraid, 'It will harm me as I eat.' 'Thee with the mouth of Agni I eat', he said, for nothing harms the mouth of Agni. He was afraid [6], 'It will harm me when I have eaten.' 'With the belly of the Brahman', he said, for nothing harms the belly of the Brahman. 'With the holy power (Brahman) of Brhaspati', (he said), for he is fullest of the holy power (Brahman). The breaths indeed depart from him who eats this offering; by purifying it with water he grasps the breaths; the breaths are ambrosia, the waters ambrosia; verily he summons the breaths according to their places.

ii. 6. 9. He1 takes a portion for the Agnidh; verily he delights the seasons whose mouth is Agni. He takes a kindling-stick, for the support of the subsequent offerings; verily he pours on that which has a kindlingstick. He rubs the enclosing-sticks; verily he purifies them. He rubs each once, for the sacrifice there is as it were turned away.2 It makes up four, cattle are four-footed; verily he wins cattle. 'O Brahman, will we set out?' he says; there indeed is the sacrifice placed [1], where the Brahman is; where the sacrifice is placed, thence does he commence it. If he were to instigate him with his hand, he would shiver; if with his head, he would have a headache; if he were to sit in silence, the sacrifice would not proceed; he should say, 'Set out.' In speech the sacrifice is placed; where the sacrifice is placed, thence does he bestow it. 'O god Savity, that he [2] hath proclaimed to thee', he says, for impelling. 'Brhaspati is the (priest) Brahman', he says, for he is fullest of the holy power (Brahman). 'Do thou guard the sacrifice, guard the lord of the sacrifice, guard me', he says; for the sacrifice, the sacrificer, and himself, for these he thus invokes a blessing, to prevent misfortune, Having caused (him) to 5 call out, he says, 'Utter the verse for sacrifice to the gods.' The theologians say, 'The gods have been sacrificed to; what gods are they?' 'The metres', he should reply, 'Gayatri Tristubh [3], and Jagati.'1 Then they say, 'The metres are the Brahmans'; verily he sacrifices to them. The deities were sacrificed to by the gods; then Agni did not burn forth; the gods found him by the offerings in the after-sacrifices; in that he offers the after-sacrifices verily thus one kindles Agni. There was an Asura, named Etadu. He then appropriated the blessing of the sacrifice. If one were to say, 'That indeed (etad u) hath been glorious, O sky and earth' [4], one would cause Etadu to attain the blessing of the sacrifice. 'This (idam) has been glorious, sky and earth', he should say; verily he makes the sacrificer attain the blessing of the sacrifice. 'We have won the utterance of prayer and homage', he says; 'we have won this', he says in effect. 'It resteth on sky and earth', he says, for the sacrifice rests on the sky and earth. 'Helpful for thee in this sacrifice, O sacrificer, be sky and earth' [5], he says; verily he invokes this blessing. If he were to say, 'easy of access and easy to dwell on', the sacrificer would be likely to perish, for when he perishes he has recourse to this (earth). 'Easy of approach, and easy to move on', he should say; verily he invokes for him a wider sphere, and he is not likely to perish. 'In the knowledge of these two Agni hath rejoiced in this offering', he says; 'the gods we have sacrificed to [6], we have made them to prosper', he says in effect. If he were not to indicate (the sacrificer), the blessing of the sacrifice would go to his neighbour. 'This sacrificer imploreth (a blessing) N. N.', he says; verily by indicating him he makes him attain the world of heaven. 'He imploreth length of days, he imploreth a noble offspring', he says; verily he invokes this blessing. 'He imploreth superiority over his equals', he says; his equals are the breaths; verily he does not obstruct his breaths [7]. 'Agni shall win, god, from the gods, we men from Agni', he says, 'Agni wins from the gods, we from men', he says in effect. 'Here is the path of favour, and this our homage to the gods', he says; to both the gods whom he sacrifices to and those to whom he does not sacrifice, he pays homage, for his own security.

^{*} This is said of the Adhvaryu by the Brahman.

Having said to the Agnidhra, off critcaya, he tells the Hotr to repeat the Yajya; Hillebrandt, Rituallitteratur, p. 99. In this case the original sense 'honour by sacrifice' is seen; see Speijer, Sanskrit Syntax, § 45.

ii. 6, 10. The 2 gods could not find any one to utter the call Svagā at the sacrifice. They spoke to Çamyu Bārhaspatya, 'Perform the Svagā call at this sacrifice for us.' He said, 'Let me choose a boon; if a faithless man sacrifice, or a man sacrifices without prescription, let the blessing

This chapter explains the origin of the Campuvaka Mantras and mentions the Patnisamyājas, or sacrifices to the wives of the gods with the god. For the Mantras see TB. iii. 5, 11, 1; 12, 1; cf. CB.

abrūhmaņokiah may mean, as the comm. says, 'who is not laid down in a Brāhmana', of such a sacrificer be mine.' Therefore if a faithless man sacrifices, or a man sacrifices without prescription, the blessing of such a sacrifice goes to Çamyu Barhaspatya. 'That is mine', he said, 'What is to belong to my offspring ? [1].' 'Him, who reviles him, he shall fine with a hundred; him, who strikes him, he shall fine with a thousand; he, who draws blood from him, shall not behold the world of the Pitrs for as many years as are the grains of dust which the blood in its fall seizes upon', (they replied).1 Therefore one should not revile a Brahman, nor strike him, nor draw blood from him; for so great is his sin. 'That health and wealth we choose', he says; verily he utters the call Svaga over the sacrifice. 'That [2] health and wealth we choose', he says; verily he gives Camyu Barhaspatya his portion. 'Success to the sacrifice, success to the sacrificer', he says; verily he invokes this blessing. He sacrifices to Soma; verily he places seed; he sacrifices to Tvastr; seed is placed and Tvastr moulds forms; he sacrifices to the wives of the gods, to make a pair; he sacrifices to Agni, lord of the house, for support. There is sameness in the sacrifice [3] in that the fore-sacrifices are offered with butter, and the sacrifices to the wives (are offered) with butter. Having repeated the Rc, of the sacrifices to the wives he offers with a Rc, to prevent sameness, and to make a pairing.2 The sacrifice has a fivefold prelude and a fivefold end; there are offered five fore-sacrifices; there are four sacrifices to the wives, the fifth is the Samistayajus;3 verily they make up five as a prelude, and five as an end.

ii. 6. 11. a. Yoke ' like a charioteer, Agni, or simply 'without being told to do it by a Brahman'. That two persons is meant is possible (so comm.), but the same individual may be designated by his two defects.

I This is the grant to the descendants of Brhaspati, viz. the Brahmans. The person who is to fine is not specified; presumably at this stage the king is meant, for in the law-books he is emphatically the fountain of criminal justice; cf. Foy, Die königliche Gewalt, pp. 20 seg. ; but it is clear here that the Brahmans are supposed to receive the price, i.e. the compensation is paid to them and there is a clear case of wergeld; cf. Jolly, Recht und Sitte, pp. 181, 132. This is in accordance with the view of both BDS. 1, 10, 19, 1, and of ApDS. L 10. 24. 1 taken by Bühler (cf. Festgruss an Roth, pp. 44-52; SBE. ii. 78, 79), viz. that the fines go to the relatives via the king (BDS.), who in that Sütra receives the fine of a bull, which, however, in the ApDS. goes to the Brahmans, not as the persons injured, but as the settlers of penances (prāyaccitta). The unit is no doubt the cow, not niṣkas or other coins or measures (such as the Krsnala, for which of Vedic Index, i. 185).

The Prayajas are performed with the Yajus verses only, not with Puronuvakya and Yajya like the Anuyajas, and so the desired absence of monotony is attained. The term Patnisamyaja seems to refer to offerings as directed to the wives of the gods generally along with other gods, viz. Soma, Tvaştr, the wives of the gods, and Agui Grhapati.

For this rite cf. CB. i. 9. 2. 26, 27; Eggeling, SBE. xii. 263; Hillebrandt, pp. 168, 169.

⁴ This chapter contains the Mantras for the Samvargesti, cf. KS. vii. 7; MS. iv. 11, 6. The steeds that best invite the gods; Set down as ancient Hotr.

- b And, O god, for us do thou the gods, Most wise one, call hither; Make all our wishes true;
- c Since thou, O most young, O son of strength, who art sacrificed to, Art righteous and worthy of sacrifice,
- d This Agni is lord of a thousandfold. A hundredfold, strength; The sage, the head of wealth.
- e Bring him hither ' with common call Lower to our sacrifice, O Angiras. As the Rbhus bend the felly (of the chariot) [1]
- f To him, the heavenly, Now with constant voice, O Virupa, To the strong one urge the hymn of praise.
- g What? Pani shall we lay low among the kine With the missile of this Agni Who seeth from afar?
- h May not the clans of the gods forsake us, Like the dawns entering the waters, As cows a poor man.
- i Let not the assault Of any ill-minded foe smite us, As a wave a ship.
- k Homage to thee, O Agni, for might, The people sing, O god; With strength [2] trouble thou the foe.
- Wilt thou not, O Agni, Bring us wealth for our quest for cattle? O room maker, make room for us.

According to ApCS, xix. 25. 9-18 the verses are used as follows; a-k form the Samidhenis, then the Puronuvākyā is l, the Yājyā m, with n as a variant; then the Puronuvākyā for the Svistakrt offering is c, p is a variant, q is the Yājyā. Then r-t are verses for the Upahoma. The next four, Pratikas only (found, the first two in full, at ii. 2. 12. 1; the second at i. 8. 22. 5, both Yājyā sections) are the Anuvākyās and Yājyās for the two sacrifices prescribed in ii. 4. 4. 2, 3

1 This verse seems best to be taken as one, the voc. being inorganic: the option is to take it as implying a verb 'come', and that is possible.

* kim must be interrogative here. For Pani cf. Vedic Index, i. 471-478.

- m Cast us not aside in this great contest, Like a bearer his burden; Gather' wealth and conquer it.

- Weber suggests that sim virgam is the original, but there is no special ground for that. That it is an adjective is possible, but there is no conclusive ground against taking it as a gerund; cf. Whitney, Sansk. Gramm. p. 360. The formation is common in the Brahmanas onwards and may legitimately be seen earlier. Cf. the discussion of nayam by Pischel, Ved. Stud. i. 37 seq.; Bohtlingk, BKSGW. lv. 113 seq.; Oldenberg, ZDMG. lv. 283 seq.; Rgveds-Noten, i. 121, 370. Macdonell (Ved. Gramm.) ignores the indeclinables in am for the Mantra literature.

- This chapter gives the Hotr's verses at the sacrifice to the fathers. According to the ritual a is a Samidheni verse, b and c Puronuväkyäs, d a Yājyā, these to accompany the offering of a cake on six potsherds to Soma Pitrmant. Verse e is Eagerly would we kindle thee; Eager bring the eager, The fathers, to eat the offering.

- b Thou, O Soma, art pre-eminent in wisdom;
 Thou movest along the straightest path;
 Through thy guidance, O drop, our fathers wisely divided The treasure among the gods.²
- c By thee, O Soma Pavamāna, our ancient fathers Wisely ordained the offerings; Conquering, untroubled, do thou open the barriers; Be generous to us in heroes and horses [1].
- d Thou, O Soma, in accord with the fathers, Hast stretched over sky and earth; To thee, O drop, let us make sacrifice with offering; Let us be lords of wealth.
- e O fathers, made ready by Agni, come hither; With good leadership sit ye on each seat; Eat ye the offerings set out on the strew; And give us wealth with many heroes.⁵
- f O fathers that sit on the sacrificial strew, come hither with your aid; We have made these offerings for you; accept them, And then come to us with your most healing aid, Give us [2] health, wealth, and safety!

the Puronuvakya, for the offering of a mess (mantha) to the fathers Agnipvătta, the Yajya and the second Puronuvākyās are not here given. f and g are Puronuvākyās, a the Yājyā of an offering to the fathers barkiead. i, k, and i relate to an Upahoma; m and n are Puronuvākyās, o Yājyā of an offering to Agni karyarahana, p and q and r serve the same functions in an offering to Yama with the Angirases. - This is RV. x. 15. 8; AV. xviii. 1. 45; VS. xix. 56; KS. without variant; in MS. yé is placed after swadháyá. The vikrómanam is obscure.
- This is RV. x. 15. 5; VS. xix. 57; KS. and MS. without variant. AV. xviii. 3. 45 inserts an unnatural man after upahulah. Whitney takes midhigu as 'treasures' in the shape of libations (as comm. midhiyamanent havings).
- This is RV. x. 15. 1; AV. xviii. 1. 44; VS. xix. 49; MS. and KS. without variant. According to Whitney drawn aprir refers to their going to life, not through life, but of the regular Brahmana phrase dyer eti, 'he lives out his days'.

- This is RV. x. 15. 2; VS. xix. 68, and MS. AV. xviii. 1. 46 has dparasah and dikpa for vikşul. Weber in his note here suggests an original u párasah, which is hardly probable.
- This is RV. iv. 2. 16; VS. xix. 69, without change. AV. xviii. 3. 21 has apicandh and didhyatuh. The verse is not over clear in sense, but appears to mean that something is now to be done as it was of old.
- This is a variant of RV. x. 16. 11; VS. xix. 65; KS. xxi. 14, which all have yo agnih, and kravyardhanah in the case of RV. yad agne, &c., is, of course, read in TB. ii. 6. 16. 2. The construction is not very easy with yad. yakn will then have its proper indic. sense (cf. Whitney, Sansk. Gramm. p. 237), but co is unintelligible.
- 7 This is RV. x. 15. 12, which has kytel, and

- o Mātalī with the Kavyas, Yama with the Angirases, Brhaspati rejoicing with the Rkvans, Those whom the gods magnified and those who magnified the gods; Some in the Svahā call, some in the Svadhā rejoice [5].¹
- p Sit on this strew, O Yama, In accordance with the Angirases, the fathers; Let the verses made by the poets bring thee hither; Rejoice, O king, in this offering.²
- q Come with the Angirases who deserve the sacrifice; Yama, rejoice here with the Vairupas; I summon Virasvant who is thy father, Sitting down on the strew at this sacrifice.
- r The Angirases, our fathers, the Navagyas, Atharvans, Bhṛgus, who love the Soma; May we be in the favour of those ones worthy of sacrifice, May we have their kindly good will.

VS. xix. 66, which, however, has karyavahana for jātaredah. AV. xviii. 8. 42 agrees exactly. saudhāyā must mean as rendered rather than 'after their wont' as Whitney (on AV. 1. c.) doubtfully.

¹ This is RV. x. 14. 8; MS. iv. 14. 16. AV. xviii, 1. 47 d has ti no atomic pitric havege as in xviii. 1. 44 d. For Matali of, Winternitz, VOJ. xxvii. 233.

This is RV. x. 14. 5; MS. iv. 14. 16, without variant. AV. xviii. 1. 59 has yajiliyair d galilid and omits yajild. There is here a clear case of parenthesis but an obvious one.

⁴ This is RV. x, 14. 6; VS. xix. 50; AV. xviii, 1, 58, all without variant.

The Supplement to the Soma Sacrifice

iii. 1. 1. Prajāpati1 desired, 'May I create offspring.' He did penance, he created serpents. He desired, 'May I create offspring.' He did penance a second time, he created birds. He desired, 'May I create offspring.' He did penance a third time, he saw this speech of the consecrated, he spoke it. Then indeed did he create offspring. In that after undergoing penance he speaks the speech of the consecrated, the sacrificer thus [1] creates offspring. If one who is consecrated sees anything impure, the consecration departs from him; his dark colour, his beauty goes away. 'Mind unbound; eye weak; sun best of lights; O consecration, forsake me not', he says,2 and consecration departs not from him, his dark colour and his beauty go not away. If rain falls on one who is consecrated, the heavenly waters if unappeased destroy his force, might, consecration [2], and penance. Do ve flowing waters place might (in me), place force, place might; do not destroy my consecration, nor my penance', he says; verily he places all that in himself; they do not destroy his force, might, consecration, or penance. Agni is the divinity of the consecrated man, and he is concealed as it were from him, when he goes (out), and the Raksases are able to hurt him [3]. 'From good to better do thou advance; may Brhaspati be thy forerunner', he says. Brhaspati is the holy power (Brahman) of the gods; verily he grasps hold of him, and he brings him safely through. 'Here we have come (a-idam) to the place on earth for sacrifice to the gods', he says, for he comes to the place on earth for sacrifice, who sacrifices. 'Wherein aforetime all the gods rejoiced', he says, for all the gods delight in it, in that the Brahmans so do. 'Accomplishing (the rite) with Re, Saman, and Yajus', he says, for he who sacrifices accomplishes (the rite)

I This Kanda contains additional matter dealing with the Soma sacrifice and one or two points of the new and full moon sacrifice (see iii. 5. 1 and 7), the animal sacrifice (iii. 3. 9, 10; 4. 1-3), the piling (iii. 4. 4-8), the Devika offerings (iii. 4. 9), and the Agnihotra (iii. 4. 10). For the Mantras corresponding to this section, see 1. 2. 3. 3. Cf. KS. xxiii. 6 ad fin.; CB.

iji. 1. 2, 11; KÇS. xxv. 11. 24, 23; vii. 5. 16; ĀpÇS. x. 15. S; MÇS. ii. 1. 2. 36. The subject of the chapter is the Mantras to be used by the Dikşita. Most of it is repeated with additions in BÇS. xiv. 1.

² This is one of many variant versions, and in this form it occurs at BDS, i. 7, 15, 31; iii. 8, 18. In KCS, xxv. 11, 24 hast is read: see Keith, Attareya Aranyaka, p. 237. with Rc, Saman, and Yajus. 'Let us rejoice in fullness of wealth, in sustenance', he says; verily he invokes this blessing.

iii. 1. 2. 'This is thy Găyatrī part', say for me to Soma.¹ 'This is thy Tristubh, Jagatī, part', say for me to Soma.

"Become lord of the Chandomas', say for me to Soma.

He who purchases King Soma after making it go to the world of lordship, becomes lord of his own (people). The world of lordship of King Soma is the metres; he should utter these verses before the purchase of Soma. It is to the world of lordship that he makes it go when he buys (Soma) [1], and he becomes lord of his own. He, who knows the support of the Tanunaptra,3 finds support. The theologians say, 'They do not eat, nor offer; then where does the Tanunaptra find support?' 'In Prajapati, in the mind', he should reply. He should smell at it thrice, (saying), 'In Prajapati thee, in the mind I offer'; this indeed is the support of the Tanunaptra; he who knows thus finds support. He who [2] knows the support of the Adhvaryu finds support. He should call (on the Agnīdhra), standing in the place without moving whence he is minded to sacrifice. This is the support of the Adhvaryu; he who knows thus finds support. If he were to sacrifice moving about, he would lose his support; therefore he should sacrifice standing in the same place, for support. He who knows the possession of the Adhvaryu, becomes possessed (of what he needs). His possession is the offering-spoon, his possession is the Vayu cup, his [3] possession is the beaker. If he were to call without holding the Vayu cup or the beaker, he would lose his own; therefore he must hold it when he calls; verily he loses not his own. If he begins the litany without placing the Soma,5 the Soma is not supported, the Stoma is not supported, the hymns are not supported, the sacrificer is not supported, the Adhvaryu is not supported. The support of the Soma is the Vayu cup, the support of it is the beaker, (the support) of the Stoma is Soma, (the support) of the hymns is the Stoma. He should grasp the cup or fill up the beaker, and then begin the litany; a support to the Soma he verily (eva) gives, to the Stoma, to the hymns; the sacrificer finds support, the Adhvaryu finds support.

Literally make the Agnidhra utter (dpratopati): he says on gravays and the response is astu gravay; see Hillebrandt, Estualliteratur, p. 99.

For the commencement of the Stotras cf. ApÇS. xii. 17.9 seq. Uktha here as usual means Çastra as opposed to Stotra.

These are Somopasthana or Somavimana Mantras referring to the placing of Soma in the cups or beakers, and they should appear between the Mantras in i. 2. 6 and 7. Cf. VS. iv. 24; ÇB. iii. 3, 2, 6; and see BÇS. xiv. 2; vi. 14; ApÇS. x. 24; MÇS. ii. 1. 4; KÇS. vii. 7, 8; Caland and Henry, L'Agnisjoma, p. 41.

iii. 1. 3. They 1 gather together the sacrifice when (they gather the dust of) the foot-print of the Soma cow; the oblation-holders are the mouth of the sacrifice; when they move forward the oblation-holders, then he should oil the axle with it; verily he extends the sacrifice in the mouth of the sacrifice. They lead Agni forward, they take the wife forward, and they make the carts follow after. Now the altar of him (Agni) is deserted; he broods on it, and is liable to become terrible (rudrá) [1], and lay to rest the offspring and cattle of the sacrificer. When they are leading northward the sacrificial animal over which the Apris have been said, he should take (from the altar the fire) for cooking it; verily he makes him share in it. The Ahavanīya is the sacrificer; if they take (the fire) for cooking the victim from the Ahavaniya, they tear the sacrificer asunder; the fire should therefore be thus, or he should make it by friction, so that the sacrificer's body may remain together. If a portion of the victim be lost, he should cut off an equivalent portion of the butter; that is then the atonement. If men disturb his victim and he wish of them, 'May they come to ruin', he should make an offering in the Agnidh's altar with the Re containing the word 'paying of homage' (and beginning), 'What then?' Verily he appropriates their paying of homage and speedily do they go to ruin.

iii. 1. 4. a The offspring,³ being born of Prajāpati And those that have been born, To him declare them; Let the wise one reflect thereon.⁴
b This victim, O lord of cattle, for thee to-day,

This chapter deals with the anointing of the oblation-carts with the ghee in the dust of the seventh footstep of the Soma cow, and the making of the fire for cooking the sacrificial animal, which is to be either freshly kindled by friction (nirmanthyà) or to be taken from the Gärhapatya fire, not from the Ahavaniya. Cf. ApCS. xi. 17; BCS. xiv. 3.

These are the Yajya verses of the fore-sacrifices in the animal sacrifice: see Eggeling, SBE. xxvi. 185; Müller, Anc. Sansk. Lit.

Cf. KS. xxx. S, and for o-g AV. ii. 34. For the Brähmana, see TS. iii. 1. 5; KS. xxx. 9. According to ApCS. vii. 12 (cf. MCS. i. 8. 3) the Mantras a and b are used at the touching of the victim with the Barbis and a twig of Plaksa as a preparation for the sacrifice; c-g accompany five oblations; of the other Mantras A is said by the Adhvaryu at the slaughtering of the victim; i is used immediately on the death of the victim; k and I are said when the noose is loosened from the victim; m accompanies the pouring of ghee on the omentum, and n is the Yājyā for the offering of the omentum; o accompanies the two Parivapya offerings: see the Sutra quotations in Schwab, Dus altindische Thieropfer, pp. 75, 107, 108, 114, 120. Cf. BCS. ziv. 3 ad fin. The position of the two Parivapyas is much disputed : see Schwab, p. 118, who, curiously enough, omits to identify the citation of o in the texts.

 In KS, the reading in c is tā asmai prativedaya. I bind, O Agni, in the midst of righteous action; 1 Approve it, and let us sacrifice with a good offering; May this offering be welcome to the gods.

c The ancient wise ones grasp

The breath as it speedeth from the limbs;
Go to heaven by the paths which lead to the gods;
Be among the plants with thy members.

d What cattle the lord of cattle ruleth [1], Both the four-footed and the two-footed, May he, bought off, go to his sacrificial share; May abundances of wealth fall to the sacrificer.

e Those, who being bound, contemplated
With mind and with eye him who was being bound Let the god Agni first release them, Lord of offspring, in harmony with offspring.

f The cattle of the forest, of all forms, Of various forms, many of one form. Let the god Vayu first release them, Lord of offspring, in harmony with offspring.

g Releasing [2] the seed of being,
Do ye further the sacrificer, O gods;
May that which hath stood ready and strenuous, Go alive to the place of the gods.

h The breath of the sacrificer is apart from the victim;
The sacrifice goeth to the gods with the gods;
Let it go alive to the place of the gods;

¹ This verse is not in KS., which has a differont verse: payapatch paçam virupus sadrça uta | teştin yani vanvire devăs tam svarād anumanyatām.

In AV. ii. 84. 5 grhnantu is read, and c and d interchange, while d begins divari gacha; KS. has adhinicarantam and hute yahi, which is the reading of MS. ii. 5. 10, which has c and d only. prive is of uncertain sense: Whitney suggests that it alludes to an anticipating of the demons. Weber (Ind. Stad. xiii. 210) suggests the kindred who have already died, or the Maruts. For the plants of, RV. x. 16. 3.

In AV. ii. 84. 1 this runs we fee ending we despeiden, while in the next line as replaces 'yam and we jamanam secontim is read. KS, has catupaide uto we despeidely, and mistruits to . . . yants yajamanam viconts. The idea is plainly that a portion buys off the rest of the herd.

In AV. ii. 34. 3 didhyand anvaikpanta is read, and the end is vigrakarmal prajdyd samrarandb. KS. has anvaikpanta; MS. i. 2. 15 has anv and ends with samrarandb. The reference is apparently to the connexions of the victim; see CB. iii. 7. 4. 5; Weber, p. 209.

In AV. ii. 84. 4 grampdh is road, and the ond is somrarandh. KS. ends virukorma somraranuh. TA. has a verse (iii. 11. 32) the same as TS. and another the same as AV.

In AV. ii. 34. 2 pramu@cintah is read and for jicim the weak pripim, which KS. also has. The sense is most probably a nom., not an accus. For pdihas see Sieg, Gurup@jikaumudi, p. 98 (√pd, 'drink'); Oldenberg, ZDMG. liv. 607 (pd, 'protect' = 'home'); Macdonell, Ved. Gramm. p. 118, n. 4 ('path', but this is very doubtful).

Fulfilled may the desires of the sacrificer be.1

- i If the victim has uttered a cry,
 Or striketh its breast with its feet,
 May Agni release me from that sin,
 From all misfortune.
- k O ye slayers, come To the sacrifice [3] sped by the gods; Free the victim from the noose, The lord of the sacrifice from the bond.³
- I May Aditi loosen this noose; Homage to the cattle, to the lord of cattle, I pay; I cast down the enemy; On him whom we hate I fasten the noose.
- m Thee they keep to carry the offering, To cook (the victim) and as worthy of sacrifice; O Agni, with thy strength and thy body, be present And accept our offerings, O Jatavedas.
- n O Jatavedas, go with the caul to the gods, For thou art the first Hot;; With ghee do thou strengthen their bodies; May the gods eat the offering made with the cry of 'hail!'* o Hail to the gods; to the gods hail!
- iii. 1. 5. Cattle ⁷ belong to Prajāpati; their overlord is Rudra. In that he prepares (them) with these two (verses), verily by addressing him with them he secures him, so that his self is not injured. He prepares (them) with two; the sacrificer has two feet; (verily it serves) for support. Having prepared them, he offers five libations; cattle are fivefold; ⁸ verily he
- ¹ In KS. the second line is sampag dyar yajio yajiiapatan dadhātu. The sense given above must be correct: Schwab's version (p. 101), 'the sacrifice consisting of various parts', is apparently a slip. The essence is the separation of the two breaths; see iii, 1. 5 and KS, xxx. 9.
- This verse is not in KS., but besides the Crauta Sūtras (ĀpÇS. vii. 17. 3; MÇS. i. 8. 3. 34; ÇÇS. iv. 17. 12; KÇS. xxv. 9. 12) it is found in SMB. ii. 2. 11; GGS. iii. 10. 28 (in Pratika, KhGS. iii. 4. 7). The theory is that the animal should fall ailently; see Schwab, p. 106.
- ³ Cf. MS. i. 2. 15. KS. has a verse of similar sense, but quite different form.
- MS. i. 2. 15 has páçān-etán, then paçób páçān paçupáter cidhi | yó no dvésty dáharas sá padyatān tásmin páçān prátimuñcāma etán.

- KS. has parameter but agrees in b with TS. except that it ends as to: in c and d it agrees with MS. but has the older form padigia.
- ⁸ KS. differs in having tye and vicakeyom for havyavdham. In the next line it has satural, the older form, and vaha havyani develops jätavedah.
- KS. agrees in a and b, but in c and d it has ghrinspagne tuned sambhara satylis santu yajamanasya kamab.
- ⁷ This explains part of iii. I. 4; cf. KS. xxx. 9.
- * Cf. Eggeling, SBE. xii. 16, n. 1, where he refers to the fact that there are five sacrificial victims. The comm. explains that the reference is to the four feet and the tail!

wins cattle. Now the victim is led to death, and if he should lay hold on it, the sacrificer would be likely to die. 'The breath of the sacrifice is apart from the victim', he says, for distinction [1]. 'If the victim has uttered a cry'—(with these words) he offers a libation, for calming. 'O ye slayers, come to the sacrifices', he says; that is according to the text. When the omentum is being taken, the strength goes away from Agni. 'Thee they keep to carry the offering'—(with these words) he pours a libation over the omentum; verily he wins the strength of Agni; (it serves) also for making (the victim) ready. In the case of some gods the cry of 'hail!' is uttered before (an offering), in the case of others the cry of 'hail!' is uttered after. 'Hail to the gods, to the gods hail!'— (with these words) he pours a libation on either side of the omentum; verily he delights both (sets of gods).

iii. 1. 6. a 'He 'who performs the sacrifice not according to the deities falls a victim to the deities, he becomes worse. He who (performs) in accordance with the deities does not fall a victim to the deities, he becomes better. He should rub the Agnidh's place with a verse addressed to Agni, the oblation-holder with one addressed to Viṣṇu, the offering-spoons with one addressed to Agni, the Vāyu cups with one addressed to Vāyu, the Sadas with one addressed to Indra. Thus he forms the sacrifice in accordance with the deities, he does not fall a victim to the deities, he becomes better.

b I yoke earth for thee with light, I yoke wind for thee with the atmosphere [1], I yoke speech for thee with the sun, I yoke the three spaces 4 of the sun for thee.

1 These directions and Mantras should take their place before i, S. 13. From the ritual (ApÇS. vil. 1-3; BÇS. vii. 1, 2; MCS. ii. 3. 1) it appears that they are used in connexion with the stroking of the several implements; then b in connexion with the placing of the three large enclosing sticks (mahāparidhi), and e in connexion with the stroking of the several vessels used in the rite, all the acts forming part of the ceremonies at the morning (mahdratrika) litany of the pressing-day of the Agnistoma. Ap. and M. with Bhar. and Hir., however, apply b to the Dronakalaça (wooden tub), Adhavaniya and Patabhrt implements and not to the enclosing-sticks. See Caland and Henry, L'Agnistoma, pp. 126, 128, 187. The chapter is repeated summarily in BCS. xiv. 4.

On the constr., cf. Ludwig, Der Rgveda, iv. 249; Oldenberg, SBE. xIvi. 19 seq.; Rgveda-Noten, i. 28, 24.

These verses are, acc. to BCS., TS. i. 5. 5 c (Agnl); iii. 1. 10 k (Visnu); ii. 6. 11 d (Agnl); ii. 2. 12 bb (Vayu); iv. 6. 3 m (Indra). Bhar. gives none, and ApCS. and Hir. vary the verses. KCS. omits the whole rite, and MCS. the verses.

The term vipical is not obvious in sense, and in fact the tradition varies so as to show that it was not clearly understood even early. MCS. ii. 3. 1. 12 has virtal silval sarch (or sare), and PB. 1. 2. 1 has yukais tisro vimrahab silvalya. Caland and Henry, p. 128, suggest doubtfully 'épouses' as the version. The verse is used to accompany the placing of the offering spoons and should be marked as a separate Yajus. The comm. thinks that vipic refers to the separateness of the three spoons or ladles, juki, upabler, c Agni is the deity. Gavatri the metre, thou art the vessel of the silent offering.1 Soma is the deity, Tristubh the metre, thou art the vessel of the restrained offering.2 Indra is the deity, Jagati the metre, thou art the vessel of Indra and Vayu. Brhaspati is the deity, Anustubh the metre, thou art the vessel of Mitra and Varuna. The Acvins are the deity, Pankti the metre, thou art the vessel of the Acvins. Sūrya is the deity, Brhatī the metre [2], thou art the vessel of the pure (Soma). Candramas is the deity, Satobrhatī the metre, thou art the vessel of the mixed (Soma). The All-gods are the deity. Usnih the metre, thou art the vessel of the opening offering. Indra is the deity. Kakubh the metre, thou art the vessel of the hymns. Earth is the deity. Virāj the metre, thou art the vessel of the reserved (offering).3 iii. 1. 7. The 4 Adhvaryu is he that brings trouble 5 on the sacrificer, and he that brings trouble himself is ruined before the trouble. 'From the formula spoken, guard me, from every execration'-(with these words) he should pour a libation before the morning litany (of the Hotr). So the Adhvaryu girds himself in front with a protection, to avert trouble.

For entry thee, for rest thee, for the overcoming of the Gayatri, of the Tristubh, of the Jagati, hail! O expiration and inspiration, protect me from death. O expiration and inspiration forsake me not.

They contend as to the deities and to expiration and inspiration [1], whose Soma (offerings) compete. 'For entry thee, for rest thee', he says; entry and rest are the metres; verily by the metres he appropriates his metres. The Ajya (Stotras) have the word 'forward' in them,⁶ for conquest. The beginning verses are addressed to the Maruts, for victory. Both the Brhat and the Rathantara (Sāmans)⁷ are used. The Rathantara is this (earth), the Brhat yonder (sky); verily he cuts him off from these two. The Rathantara is

² i. e. of the Antaryama Graha, accompanied by suppression of breath and voice.

The Soma pressed in the morning but kept over for offering until the night.

Cf. KS. xxxiv. 4; PB. ix. 4. 1-19, and see also below v. 4. 11. 3; vii. 5. 5. 1; TĀ. iv. 1. 1; 42. 2; and TB. i. 4. 6. 1-5. For the Sūtras cf. ĀpÇS. xiv. 19; BÇS. xiv. 41; KÇS. xxv. 14. 8-18; ÇÇS. xiii. 5. 4-6; LÇS. i. 11. 10. The first sentence deals merely with a common feature of the ritual, the Adhvaryu's prayer to be kept from evil; see Caland and Henry,

p. 128. The rest of the chapter is concerned with the case of rivalry between two or more sacrificers.

b istingul is of very dubious sense, and aratil, an abl. of arat, is equally uncertain in sense. The comm. is followed, but it is impossible to say if correctly. The Mantra is only found in the Sutras, ApCS. xii. 3. 9; ending abhipushed sedled in ACS, iv. 13. 1; and with pure after pulsi in MCS, ii. 3. 1, 2.

The Ajyastotra normally begins with RV. vi. 16. 10 dgme d yāhi (see Caland and Henry, pp. 236-238), but in this case it is to begin pro vo vājāḥ (RV. iii. 27. 1).

Usually in the Prathas these alternate; both are here laid down as used. to-day, the Brhat to-morrow; verily he cuts him off from to-day and to-morrow. The Rathantara is the past [2], the Brhat the future; verily he cuts him off from the past and the future. The Rathantara is the measured, the Brhat the unmeasured; verily he cuts him off from the measured and the unmeasured. Viçvāmitra and Jamadagni had a quarrel with Vasiṣṭha. Jamadagni saw this Vihavya (hymn),¹ and by means of it he appropriated the power and strength of Vasiṣṭha. In that the Vihavya is recited, the sacrificer appropriates the power and strength of his enemy. 'He who performs more rites of sacrifice',² they say, 'appropriates the gods.' If the Soma (sacrifice) on the other side is an Agniṣṭoma, he should perform an Ukthya; if it is an Ukthya, he should perform an Atirātra; verily by means of rites of sacrifice he appropriates his deities; he becomes better.

iii. 1. 8. a Ye³ are the Nigrābhyas, heard by the gods. Delight my life, delight my expiration, delight my inspiration, delight my cross-breathing, delight my eye, delight my ear, delight my mind, delight my speech, delight my trunk, delight my limbs, delight my offspring, delight my cattle, delight my house, delight my troops, delight me with all my troops, delight me [1]; may my troops not go thirsty.

b The plants are the subjects of Soma; the subjects indeed are able to give up the king; Soma is connected with Indra. 'I have made you grow in my mind, O ye well born; O ye born of right, may we enjoy your favour; may the divine plants in accord with Indra grant us the Soma for the pressing', he says; verily having begged him from the plants, his subjects, and his deity he presses him. c When the Soma is pressed [2] the first drop which falls has potency to destroy the power, strength, offspring,

The term yayñakrati has here a pregnant sense, the rites which make up the sacrifice: the comm. ronders yayña as havistyága and krutu as añgopañga, but also compares cútavyksa and panasavyksa, which are not real parallels at all.

³ Cf. KS. iii. 10; KapS. ii. 17; MS. i. 3. 2; VS. vi. 30, 31; CB. iii. 9. 4. 7. In the ritual a is spoken by the sacrificer to the Nigrabhya waters (viz. the Vasativari waters when poured into the Hotr's beaker); b is used to 'increase' the Soma and is said by the sacrificer or the Adhvaryu; c is spoken over the first drop of the pressed Soma which falls; d is the first of the Vipruddhomas (for the other see iii. 1. 10 c-c). Cf. BÇS. vii. 5, 7; xiv. 4; ĀpÇS. xii. 9, 1; 10, 2; 7, 11; 16, 15; MÇS. H. 3, 2, 26; 3, 7; 3, 10; 5, 17, 18; KÇS. ix. 4, 5, 6; Caland and Henry, pp. 150, 153, 169.

KS. and MS. differ in detail but agree in substance, but MS. has gapair md md vitingate for which MCS. ii. 4. 1. 35 has gandn me md vitingat, KapS. apparently to me md vitingan. Cf. also TS. iii. 2, 5, 3.

5 This verse is poculiar to TS. It is quoted in full at MÇS. ii. 3. 3. 7. The relation of king and folk is noteworthy: the people can surrender or betray (proi-ds) him.

iii. 1. 9. a He 3 who bestows upon the gods the glory of the gods, and on men the glory of men, has the divine glory among the gods, the human glory among men. The libations which he draws off before the Agrayana libation,4 he should draw off silently; those after with noise; verily he bestows upon the gods the glory of the gods, and on men the glory of men; verily he has the divine glory among the gods, the human glory among men.

> b May Agni protect us at the morning pressing, He that belongeth to all men, all-wealful in his might; May he, the purifier, grant us wealth [1]; May we that share the draught be long-lived."

1 askān seems probably to be a second person of the s acrist (cf. Macdonell, Ved. Gramm. p. 278; Whitney, Roots, &c., p. 190). But it may be a third person (cf. skin, KS. i. 9; xxv. 4; xxxi. 8, &c.) as vadhih following may be merely a swift change of attitude. Caland and Henry, p. 153, ignoring the lack of accent on md and the improbability of an augmented form like asken, and treating radals as a third person (which is very improbable) render ' qu'elle ne saute pas . . . qu'elle n'abatte

2 This is a variant of RV. x. 17. 11, where in a there is prathamed and dyin and in c camanam for trilyam. The other texts (AV. xiv. 2. 28; VS. xiii. 5; KS. xiii. 9; xvi. 15; xxxv. 8; MS. ii. 5. 10; iii. 2. 6; iv. 8. 9) agree with TS. and TA. vi. 6. 1 in having prikirim dau dydm but read samandm. The seven Hotras are curious: 'after seven invocations' is Whitney's rendering in AV. La. The verse as here clearly makes the earth the present, the sky the former youi, and the third is presumably the place of sacrifice. The verse occurs without variant also at iv. 2. 8 b.

e Some libations have bases, some have not. Those which have a sprinkling have bases, those [2] of Soma have not bases. Taking (the cup) for Indra and Vāyu he should sprinkle it (saying), 'May the sacrifice be harmless for plants, for our cattle, for our folk; for all creatures harmless thou art; swell like ghee, O god Soma.' Verily so he makes the libations of Soma to have a base. He becomes possessed of a base who knows thus. Verily also he wets with ghee the sky and earth: they being wet are to be lived upon; he is to be lived upon [3] who knows thus.

f This is thy share, O Rudra, for which thou didst ask; rejoice in it, find (for us) the lordship of cows, abundance of wealth, with good heroes and a year's prosperity.

g Manu⁵ divided his property among his sons. He deprived Nābhānediṣṭha, who was a student, of any portion. He went to him, and said, 'How hast thou deprived me of a portion?' He replied, 'I have not deprived you of a portion; the Angirases here are performing a Sattra; they [4] cannot discern the world of heaven; declare this Brāhmaṇa to them; when they go to the world of heaven they will give thee their cattle.' He told them it, and they when going to the world of heaven gave him their cattle. Rudra approached him as he went about with his cattle in the place of sacrifice, and said, 'These are my cattle.' He replied, 'They have given them [5] to me.' 'They have not the power to do that', he replied, 'whatever is left on the place of sacrifice is mine.'
Then one should not resort to a place of sacrifice. He said, 'Give me a share in the sacrifice, and I will not have designs against your cattle. He poured out for him the remnants of the mixed (Soma). Then indeed had Rudra no designs against his cattle. When one who knows thus offers the remnants of the mixed (Soma), Rudra has no designs against his cattle.

The contrast in b is interesting : clearly the dhisdaguer reading contemplates something different (adhisavaphalake is Mahidhara's version, and so Sayana here) from the dhisandydh of RV., for which see Hillebrandt, Fed. The place of the sacrifice is made when having drawn off the libations they creep to the Bahispavamana; for they go away and they praise with verses which go away; he returns, and with a verse addressed to Visnu reverences (the Soma); Visnu is the sacrifice; verily he makes the sacrifice. 'O Visnu, as our nearest, O mighty one, grant us protection; the streams dripping honey milk for thee the unfailing source ',5 he says; verily he makes to swell by it whatever of the Soma has dried up through lying (in the barrels).

² RV. v. 83. 7. Also in KS. xi. 18. ³ RV. vi. 2. 9. The omission of any verb is noteworthy and clear, but it is easily supplied from the simile.

* RV, iii. 20. 3. Cf. also MS. ii. 13. 11. dhama may mean 'names', but it hardly seems very likely. For the form cf. Macdonell, Ved. Gramm. pp. 209, 210. The accent on the verb sandadhin shows that the pred. is bharini carried on.

RV. v. 83. 6. Also in KS. xi. 13. * RV. i. 64. 6. It is usually held that abhiruh is nom, agreeing with the Maruts, but this is uncertain: it may be an acc. (Macdonell, p. 292) and apply to apas.

Cf. Oldenberg, Rgveda-Notes, i. 63. 7 This is a very unintelligible line. In AV. vi. 22. 3 marital is nom., not voc. as here, and Whitney suggests tidoprato maradah both voc., while Ppp. reads udaphitah; in b it reads vystir yd viçed nivitas pryddi; in o éjāti glahā; in d érum tundand. The best attempt at explanation is unquestionably Pischel's (Ved. Stud. i. S1 seq.) which resolves it into a set of similes from sexual relations, and this seems certainly borne out by the use of sud. Pischel takes tim as meant for tim agreeing with writim, and legitimately treats udopnito maridad as in effect a voc. See, however, Whitney on AV. Lc., and Baunack, KZ. xxxv. 532. The comm. can make nothing of it and make the second half-verse refer to a mother and father comforting a child which is crying.

ee With ghee anoint sky and earth, with honey; Make the plants rich in milk, the waters; Make to swell strength and goodwill, When, O hero Maruts, ye pour the honey,

PRAPĀTHAKA II

iii. 2. 1. He ⁷ who sacrifices knowing the 'ascent' verses of the Pavamāna (Stotras) mounts on the Pavamānas and is not cut off from the Pavamānas. 'Thou art the hawk, with the Gāyatrī for thy metre; I grasp thee; bring me over in safety. Thou art the eagle, with the Tristubh for thy metre; I grasp thee; bring me over in safety. Thou art the vulture, with the Jagatī for thy metre; I grasp thee; bring me over in safety', he says. These [1] are the ascents of the Pavamānas; he who knowing thus these sacrifices mounts on the Pavamānas, and is not cut off from the Pavamānas. He who knows the continuity of the Pavamāna lives all his days; he does

 This chapter, which is parallel with CB.
 xii. 3. 4. 3-5, deals with certain formulae muttered along with the middle of the Stotriyas in the three Stotras called Pavamana, viz. the Bahlapavamana, Madhyandinapavamana, and Arbhavapavamana. See BCS. vil. 8; xiv. 6; ApCS, xii. 17, 14, 15; MCS, ii. 8, 6, 8; KCS, xiii. I. 11; Caland and Henry, L'Agnisioma, p. 182. See also PB. i. 3, 8; 5. 12, 15; LQS. i. 12, 13; ii, 1. 5; QQS. vi. S. 10-12. The Mantra in § 3 is used with the stroking of the three instruments, the wooden vessel (dropukalaça), stirring-vessel (ddharantya), and holder of the filtered Soma (patabhyt); see ApCS, xii. 16, 11, Caland and Henry omit this rite. For the vessels, see especially Oldenberg, ZDMG. Ixii. 459 seq.; Vedic Index, ii. 513, 514, not die before his time; he becomes rich in cattle; he obtains offspring. The Pavamana cups are drawn off, but these are not drawn off by him, the wooden vessel, the stirring-vessel, and the vessel which holds the purified Soma. If he were to begin (the Stotra) without drawing them off, he would split the Pavamana [2], and with its being split the breath of the Adhvaryu would be split. 'Thou art taken with a support; to Prajapati thee!', (with these words) he should rub the wooden vessel; 'to Indra thee!', (with these words) the stirring-vessel; 'to the All-gods thee!', (with these words) the vessel which holds the purified Soma; verily he renders continuous the Pavamana, he lives all his days; he does not die before his time; he becomes rich in cattle; he obtains offspring.

iii. 2. 2. There 1 are three pressings. Now they spoil the third pressing if there are no stalks of the Soma in it. Having offered the silent cup, he puts a shoot in the vessel which holds it, and placing it with the third pressing he should press it out. In that he makes it swell, it has a stalk (of the Soma); in that he presses it out, it has the lees (of the Soma); verily he makes all the pressings have stalks and pure Soma, and be of equal strength.

Two oceans are there extended, unperishing;
They revolve in turns like the waves in the bosom of the sea;
Seeing they pass over one of them,
Seeing not [1] they pass over the other with a bridge.
Two garments continuous one weareth;
With locks, knowing all the worlds;
He goeth in secret clad in the dark;
He putteth on his bright robe abandoning that of the worn-out one.

Whatever the gods did at the sacrifice the Asuras did. The gods saw this great sacrifice, they extended it, they performed the Agnihotra as ¹ This chapter first explains that the third pressing is akin to the first two in having also a pressing, though it is mainly a matter of the use of the yipa, the lees of the Soma, not a new pressing. Then there are given two Mantras which accompany the looking at the cups just before they creep forward for the first pressing; see ApÇS. xii. 18. 14-16; BÇS. xiv. 6-8. Then it is explained that the special sacrifices being duplications of the parts of the ordinary sacrifices invented by the gods were effective against the Asuras.

This Mantra is used when they look at the Adhavaniya and Pütabhrt vessels. The comparison is clearly to day and night figured as two oceans, and the bridge one may hold is alsep pictured perhaps as a ship. jaihare 'ea pddāh is a crux: the comm. cheerfully renders pddāh 'waves', but it is very uncertain, and some medical metaphor may be intended. The verse is not it seems elsewhere used.

This is said while looking at the Drona-kalaça. The sun is the one, but jāryai is not clear, though I have followed the rendering of the comm. If it is a dat. of jārya, then it must be compared with scapatyai (RV. i. 54. 11) and mahiyai (ib. i. 113. 6); see Macdonell, Ved. Gramm. p. 264; Lanman, Noun-Infl. p. 359.

the vow; ¹ therefore one should perform the vow twice, for twice they offer the Agnihotra. They performed the full moon rite, as the animal sacrifice to Agni and Soma [2]. They performed the new moon rite, as the animal sacrifice to Agni. They performed the sacrifice to the All-gods, ² as the morning pressing. They performed the Varunapraghāsas, as the midday pressing. They performed the Sākamedhas, the sacrifice to the fathers, and the offering to Tryambaka, as the third pressing. The Asuras sought to follow their sacrifice, but could not get on its tracks. They said, 'These gods have become inviolable (adhvartavyāḥ).' That is why the sacrifice (adhvara) is inviolable. Then the gods prospered, the Asuras were defeated. He who knowing thus offers the Soma, prospers himself, the enemy is defeated.

- iii. 2. 3. a Surrounding Agni, surrounding Indra, surrounding the All-gods, surrounding me with splendour, be purified for us, with healing for cattle, healing for men, healing for the horses, healing, O king, for the plants; may we possess the abundance of wealth that is thine who art unbroken and of heroic power, O lord of wealth; of that give me, of that may I share, of that that is thine I procure this."
 - b For my expiration, be purified, giving splendour, for splendour;
 - c For my inspiration;
 - d For my cross-breathing;
 - e For my speech [1];
 - f For my skill and strength ;

² The three Caturmasya rites are the Vaiçvadeva, Varunapraghasas, and Sakamedhas with its two dependent rites—all described in full in BÇS. v, and referred to above as parts of the Rājasūya in i, S. 2-7.

Of. KS. iv. 4; MS. i. 3. 12; VS. vii. 14. daditárah is not quite easy: 'givers' is hardly what is meant; 'preservers' is possible, and so Eggeling, SBE. xxvi. 235, MS. has athigrahitárah; but 'givers' may be pregnant for people who have it in their power to give. dahimasya meiryanya may apply to to or passya: the sense is the same in either case. The word iddim is altered to suit the exact wish (see at end).

g For my two eyes do ye be purified, giving splendour, for splendour;

i For my trunk ;

k For my members;

I For my life;

m For my strength;

purified for splendour.

q Who art thou? (Thou art) who by name. To who (kismai) thee, to who (kisma) thee, thee whom I have delighted with Soma, thee whom I have gladdened with Soma. May I be possessed of fair offspring with offspring, of noble heroes with heroes, of excellent splendour with splendour, of great abundance with abundances.

r To all my forms giving splendour [2], be purified for splendour; of that give me; of that may I share, of that that is thine I procure this.

He who desires to be great should look (on the offerings); Prajāpati is here in the vessels, Prajāpati is the sacrifice; verily he delights him, and he being delighted is purified for him with prosperity. He who desires splendour should look (on the offerings); Prajāpati is here in the vessels, Prajāpati is the sacrifice; verily he delights him, and he being delighted is purified for him with splendour. He who is ill [3] should look (on the offerings); Prajāpati is here in the vessels, Prajāpati is the sacrifice; verily he delights him, and he being delighted is purified for him with life. He who practises witchcraft should look (on the offerings); Prajāpati is here in the vessels, Prajāpati is the sacrifice; verily he delights him, and he being delighted cuts off him (the enemy) from expiration and inspiration, from speech, from skill and strength, from his eyes, from his ears, from his trunk, from the members, from life; swiftly he comes to ruin.

b May sky and earth invite me;

The Hotras call upon me in invitation.2

c 'Homage to Agni, slayer of Makha; may the glory of Makha impel me'—(with these words) he reverences the Ahavanīya. Makha is the sacrifice [1]; verily he slays the sacrifice; verily paying homage to him he creeps to the Sadas, for his own safety.

d 'Homage to Rudra, slayer of Makha; for this homage guard me'— (with these words he reverences) the place of the Agnīdh; verily paying homage to him he creeps to the Sadas, for his own safety.

e 'Homage to Indra, slayer of Makha; injure not my power and strength'—(with these words he reverences) the place of the Hotr; verily he invokes this blessing, for the preserving of his power and strength [2].

f He who creeps forward knowing the gods who cause ruin at the Sadas is not ruined at the Sadas. 'Homage to Agni, slayer of Makha', he says. These gods cause ruin at the Sadas. He, who knowing them thus creeps forward, is not ruined at the Sadas.

1 In AV. vii. 28, 1 is read reday stastir drughanáh seastih páraçur rédih paraçur nah seasti. The second half-verse is different from ours. The rendering is not certain : I accept the comm.'s view that scassia is to be applied to paragur and reddly, but Whitney in AV. Le. renders 'the rib [is] sacrificial hearth', while Caland and Henry, p. 189, ignore the width altogether, rendering 'le couteau salut'. The meaning of parps is uncertain: the comm. renders it as for typadichedona, i.e. a smaller weapon than the parupi which is for wheadichedona, and this seems better than the curious 'rib' which it normally means; cf. Vedic Index i. 508. For the sense of vighand of, the discussions of drughana in Geldner, Ved. Stud. ii. 3; v. Bradke, ZDMG. xlvi. 462; Bloomfield, id. xlviii. 546; Franke, VOJ. viii. 342. - Makha is unknown here and elsewhere: the authors do not know who he is; he occurs with the gods, especially Vâyu and Indra; cf. CB. xiv. 1. 1. 1-10; MS. iv. 5. 9; PB. vii. 5. 6. In the BV. ix. 101. 13 the Bhṛgus appear in conflict with him; cf. Macdonell, Vedic Mythology, p. 140. These Mantras again are only in TS.
- This is curious and MCS, ii. 8, 7, 2 reads sito 'cithire and omits mā. But ApCS, xii. 20, 4 and BCS, vii. 10 both have cithire which is clearly the traditional text altered for the sense by MCS. Of pratigibe sito devate (MGS, dyseaprihire added) mā mā samtāptam, ApMB, ii. 9, 3; HGS, i. 11, 9; MGS, i. 2, 16, and pratigibe sito viçuoto mā pātam, PGS, ii. 6, 30.

m From the low, from the high may I go.

" O sky and earth protect me from this day to-day."

o When he creeps forward to the seat [4], the fathers creep along after him; they have power to injure him; having crept to the seat he should look along the south side (saying), 'Come, O ye fathers; through you may I possess the fathers; may ye have good offspring in me'; verily paying reverence to them he creeps to the Sadas, for his own safety.

If a black bird touch the speckled butter, his slaves would be likely to die; if a dog touch it, his fourfooted cattle would be likely to die; if it were to be spilt, the sacrificer would be likely to die. The speckled butter is the cattle; his cattle fall, if his speckled butter falls; in that he takes again the speckled butter, he takes again cattle for him. The speckled butter is the breath; his breath [2] falls, if his speckled butter falls; in that he takes again the speckled butter, he takes again breath for him. He takes it after placing gold (in the ladle), gold is immortality, the speckled butter is the breath; verily he places immortality in his breath. It is of a hundred measures, man has a hundred years of life, a hundred powers; verily on life and power he rests. He makes a horse sniff it, the horse is connected with Prajāpati; verily from his own place of origin he fashions offspring for him. His sacrifice is broken whose speckled butter is spilt. He takes it again with a Rc addressed to Viṣṇu; Viṣṇu is the sacrifice; verily he unites the sacrifice by the sacrifice.

The several parts of a are spoken by the Adhvaryu to accompany libations from the pot of the Hotr, the Maitravaruna, the Brahmanacchansin, Potr, Nestr, Achāvāka, and Agnīdhra; b is used at the second Vasat for the second libation of the Adhvaryu, or is muttered after each offering, and the Yajus Vat, &c., is apparently used after each second Vasat, though the texts differ; see BCS. viii. 12; ApÇS, xiii, 12, 1-8; MÇS, ii. 5. 1. 31, 32; KCS. z. 5. 8-10; Caland and Henry, pp. 347-349. A male child is born, he findeth riches, And all the house prospereth unhurt.

AV. ii. 35. 3 has adding and in b yajiisiya and samayi, in c yad inac cakrain baddhai egi. MS. ii. 3. 8 has ayajiiiyah yajiiiyah, and ino mahic cakrain and egi. The sense of TS. is doubtful. Caland and Henry understand the gods to be meant by somapin and by egin and this may be the case. Whitney thinks anangdz unintelligible and this is probably correct. The metre of a is irregular, the two syllables being only made up to eleven artificially, and this suggests corruption in anangda. The third Pada is a clear case of anacoluthon, probably metri cause.

AV. ii. 35. I has anythin, and in c yd and dirigin, and in d tin (a mere blunder) and knewest; MS. ii. 3. 8 has anages, in c agrees with AV., and in d puts kynote after vicoikarma. The sense of AV. differs from that of TS. in a, did not prosper in good things', and is better than that in TS. anastappanta Whitney renders were distressed about', but it may be act. anaya(h) is according to Whitney from ava and and anastappanta (Ved. This is a curious line: the offering of a Daksina to the Pitrs is a strange idea, and the sin of doing it with desire is also strange; the line is peculiar to TS., but for e cf. md nas tamad énase deva ririgab, iii. 4. 11. 6 (RV. vii. 89. 5; AV. vi. 51. 3; KS, xxiii. 12; MS. iv. 12. 6).

VS. viii. 5 has crid asmet nare vicuse dadhifana yeld agardd dampati vamam agnutah |

though it is not quite impossible to take it as correct, but VS. makes asmai more viçre is quite impossible. Caland and

iii. 2. 9. In 1 that the Hotr addresses the Adhvaryu, he makes the thunderbolt advance towards him; 'O reciter of hymns', he says in response at the morning pressing; the syllables herein are three, the Gayatri has three Padas, the morning pressing is connected with the Gayatri; verily with the Gayatri he places the thunderbolt within the morning pressing. 'The hymn hath been uttered to Indra', he says in response at the third pressing; the syllables herein are seven, the Çakvarī has seven Padas, the thunderbolt is connected with the Çakvari; verily with the thunderbolt he places the thunderbolt within the third pressing. The theologians say, 'He indeed would be an Adhvaryu who should produce the metres in the responses according to the pressings; he would bestow brilliance upon himself at the morning pressing, power at the midday pressing, and cattle at the third pressing.' 'O reciter of hymns', he says in response at the morning pressing; the syllables herein are three, [2], the Gayatri has three Padas, the morning pressing is connected with the Gayatri; verily at the morning pressing he produces the metres in the response; now the Gayatri is brilliance, the morning pressing is brilliance; verily at the morning pressing he bestows brilliance upon himself. Of. AB. iii. 12; KB. xiv. 3. This section deals with the form of the Pratigara, or response of the Adhvaryu to the Hotr in the recitation of the Ajya Çastra; see BÇS. vii. 17; xiv. 10; ApÇS. xii. 27. 12-18; MÇS. ii. 4. 2. 23-26; KÇS. ix. 13. 29; AÇS. v. 9. 10; ÇÇS. vii. 9. 1, 6, 7; Caland and Henry, L'Agnistoma, pp. 230-232.

² váci is read by the Pada text and understood in the comm., but accei is read in KB. xiv. 3 and CCS. viii. 16. 3; 17. 3, and it must be so meant; cf. Weber, Ind. Stud. ix. 260; xiii. 95. That these are seven syllables show that váci was not contracted, contra Gopatha, ii. 3. 10; see Oldenberg, Prolegomena, pp. 375, 376.

that the Hotr addresses the Adhvaryu, he puts fear in him; if he were not to smite it off [4], they would have fear in his house before the year (was over). 'Recite, let us two rejoice',1 he responds, and thereby he smites it off. Just as one looks for the exact interval, so the Adhvaryu looks for the response. If he were to respond in advance,2 that would be as when one goes to meets the exact interval. If the (response) were to be omitted after the half-verse, that would be as when one is left behind those that are running. The Udgithas are similar 1 for the priests, the Udgitha for the Udgatrs, [5], the Rees and the Pranavas for the singers of hymns, the response for the Adhvaryus. He, who knowing thus responds, becomes an eater of food, a strong one is born among his offspring. The Hotr is this (earth), the Adhvaryu yonder (sky); in that he recites sitting, so the Hotr goes not away from the (earth), for this (earth) is seated as it were; verily thereby the sacrifice milks this (earth). In that he responds standing, so the Adhvaryu goes not away from yonder (sky) [6], for yonder (sky) stands as it were; verily thereby the sacrificer milks yonder (sky). In that he recites sitting, therefore the gods live on that which is given hence; in that he responds standing, therefore men live on what is given thence. In that he recites seated towards the east, and he responds standing towards the west, therefore seed is impregnated in front, offspring are born behind. In that the Hotr addresses the Adhvaryu, he makes the thunderbolt advance towards him; he turns towards the west; 4 verily he overcomes the thunderbolt.

iii. 2. 10. a Thou art taken with a support; thou art seated in speech ; for the ¹ This is rendered as if consi modern were read; cf. Hillebrandt, Rivadiilleratur, p. 104; for other variants cf. Weber, Ind. Stud. x. 37; xiii. 100; Eggeling, SBE, xxvi. 396, n. 1. The liturgical variants are given in Ap. loc. cit.

The best sense to give abhi here would be to suppose that it refers to the Adhvaryu making his response simultaneously with the Hotr's Om, which would accord with the simile. The comm. on Ap. seems to take it as repeating the Pratigara, which also might be made to suit the simile. It is impossible with PW. and MW. to equate abhipratigrally with pratigrally di. The comm. thinks abhi refers to performing the Pratigara either too soon or too late, and dyata, which must be as taken in the trans. a technical musical expression, he renders helplessly as nigata vac.

The sense is that the Udgithas are common to all, but in special forms; the comm. cites TU. vii. 8. I (wrongly ascribed to CU. in Bbl. Ind.).

The Adhvaryu who has first seated himself at the entrance to the Sadas with his back to the Hotr in the Sadas turns to the Hotr and therefore west to respond to him. The Hotr faces east.

 Three births in the dawns, O Agni;
 With them, knowing, do thou propitiate the gods,
 And [2] be for the sacrificer health and wealth.
- g Agni abideth in three abodes
 Of three foundations, the sage;
 May he offer and may he satisfy for us,
 The three sets of eleven (gods);
 The wise envoy made ready,
 Let the others all be rent asunder.
- h O Indra and Visnu, ye overthrew The nine and ninety strong forts of Çambara; Of Varcin, the Asura, a hundred and a thousand heroes Do ye slay irresistibly.

 'O son, these gods are abandoning thee.'
 Then said Indra, about to slay Vrtra,
 'O friend Visnu, step thou more widely.'

f Thou dost win the light; may the light forsake me not, may I not forsake the light, may the light forsake me not.

iii. 3. 2. a The maker of the sound 'Him' is Vayu, the Prastotr is Agni, the Saman is Prajapati, the Udgatr is Brhaspati, the subordinate singers are the All-gods, the Pratihartrs are the Maruts, the finale is Indra; may these gods who support breath bestow breath upon me.

b All this the Adhvaryu, as he begins, begins for the Udgatrs; 'May these gods who support breath bestow breath upon me', he says; verily he bestows all this on himself.

1 Cf. VS. vill. 38-40. For the Brahmana cf. TS. vi. 4, 8, 4. This section contains the Mantras for the cups to Agni, Indra, and Sûrya, which are used as supplementary to the Agrayana; the first is offered by the Pratiprasthatr with the Adhvaryu, the former pronouncing a as it is offered, b after the offering; c and d, s and f are similarly pronounced by the Nestr and Unnetr; see ApCS. xiii. 8. 9, 10; in BÇS, xiv. 11 the Mantras are divided into three parts, the first part said as the offering is looked at, the diledyni, &c., with the actual offering. In both cases the Mantras are to be used as the offering is eaten by the priests, and the sets of Atigrahyas are placed as occurring after the Mahendra Graha. See also KCS, xii. 8, 1, 2; CCS. x. 2, 6; 8, 18; 4, 19; Caland and Henry, L'Agnistoma, p. 166 n.

This section gives the Mantras (a) for the commencement of the Stotra and (c-h) for the Pratigara. The Adhvaryo pronounces a before the Udgatrs commence (which explains the Brahmana in b); see ApCS, xil. 17. 5-7; BCS, vii. 8; xiv. 11; MCS. ii. 3, 6, 6; KCS. ix. 3, 36; Caland and Henry, L'Agnigiona, pp. 174, 175. This section gives the Mantras for the Ançu and Adabhya Grahas which belong before i. 4, 1; there are two vessels, that for the Ançu is square, that for the Adabhya is clakma, and both are covered with gold and silver ornaments (rukma); of the Soma in the covering three shoots are pressed one by one with the Mantras a, b, c, and then water from the Vasativari waters is put into the Hotr's cup, and the next twelve Mantras (d-p) are used for stirring of the Soma in the water; q (with r) is used for the drawing from the shoots in the
- Adabhya vessel; with s he stands up with the cup, and with the second part of s goes forward, and with the offers in the Ahavaniya; then he returns the pressed shoots to the rest of the Soma with u, v, and w; x is said as he breathes over the gold which is used in the rite, and y and w when he purifies himself within the Vedi; see BÇS. xiv. 12, and cf. The theologians say, For what reason do plants spring from the waters, the food of man is plants [2], and offspring are born through Prajapati?' 'Through the Paras', he should reply. In that he draws (saying), 'For the waters thee, for the plants I take', therefore from the waters plants spring; in that he draws (saying), 'For the plants thee, for offspring I take', therefore the food of man is the plants; in that he draws (saying), 'For offspring thee, for Prajapati I take', therefore through Prajapati offspring are born. iii. 3. 7. Prajāpati3 created the gods and the Asuras; thereafter the sacrifice was created, after the sacrifice the metres; they went away in all directions, the sacrifice went after the Asuras, the metres after the sacrifice; the gods reflected, 'These have become what we are'; they had recourse to Prajāpati; Prajāpati said, 'Taking the strength of the metres I shall bestow it upon you.' He took the strength of the metres [1] and bestowed it upon them. Then the metres ran away, and the sacrifice followed the metres. Then the gods prospered, the Asuras were defeated. He who knows the strength of the metres—'Do thou proclaim', 'Be it proclaimed', 'Utter', 'We that utter', the Vaṣaṭ call—prospers himself, his foe is defeated. The theologians say, 'For whose gain does the Adhvaryu cause (him) to proclaim?' 'For the strength of the metres', he should reply; 'Do thou proclaim', 'Be it proclaimed', 'Utter', 'We that utter', the Vaṣaṭ call, that is the strength of the metres [2]; he who knows thus sings whatever he sings with the metres in full strength. 'In that Indra slew Vṛtra, there is impurity, in that he destroyed the Yatis, there is impurity; then why is the sacrifice Indra's up to the completion?' they say. The sacrifice is the sacrificial body of Indra, and it is this they sacrifice. To him who knows thus the sacrifice resorts.

iii. 3. 8. a Giving 1 life, O Agni, rejoicing in the oblation, Be thou faced with ghee and with thy birthplace of ghee; Having drunk the ghee, the sweet, the delightful product of the cow, As a father his son, do thou protect him.2

The sacrificer falls a victim to the two fires in that having made (the offering) ready in them he goes elsewhere to the final bath; 'Giving life, O Agni, rejoicing in the oblation', (with these words) should he offer when about to go to the final bath; verily by the offering he appears the two (fires); the sacrificer does not go to destruction.

b That loan which I have not yet paid back [1], The tribute that I still owe to Yama, Here do I make requital for it; Here, O Agni, may I be freed from that debt.²

¹ This section deals with the ceremonies which form part of the Avabhrtha; a accompanies an offering made when the Adhvaryu is about to go to the bath and, according to ApCS. xiii. 19. 10 (cf. KCS. xxi. 4. 26), comes in before i. 4. 45f; with b the Adhvaryu (so Baudh.) or the sacrificer burns the strew; with c he offers on the fire groats with his hands joined to make a receptacle, wiping his hands with the words agakad, &c., according to Baudh. ; this part of the rite is, however, not a normal one, but only used as a means of prognestication, as is shown not only by the TS, but also by Ap, and Baudh. ; d-f accompany reverence to the gods, Agni, Vayu, Aditya; see ApCS. xili. 24.

This verse occurs in full at i. 3, 14 m and is also found with variants in AV. ii. 13, 1 (where see Whitney's note); TB. i. 2, 1, 11; TĀ. ii. 5, 1; MS. iv. 12, 4; MB. ii. 2, 1; VS. xxxv. 17; ÇB. xiii. 8, 4, 9 and in several Sûtras. TB. and TĀ. of course agree with TS.

³ This occurs also with considerable variation in AV, vi. 117. 1, and more closely in c O Vicvalopa, I offer thee in the mouth of the burner of all;

One is an eater of the uneaten, one an eater of the unoffered, one an eater of that which is gathered;

May they make for us medicine, An abode, delightful strength.1

- d May he that fatteneth protect us From in front with the cloud; Many be our houses, That houses fail us not."
- e Do thou [2], O lord of cloud, Bestow on us strength with kindliness; Return to us what is lost, Return wealth to us.2

f O god that dost fatten, thou art a lord of a thousandfold prosperity; do thou give us increase of wealth unfailing, rich in heroes, prosperity abiding through the year.'

Yama is Agni, Yamī is this (earth); the sacrificer becomes under a debt to Yama in that he strews the altar with plants; if he were to go away without burning (them), they would drag him about bound by the neck [3] in yonder world. In that he burns, (saying) 'The loan which I have not yet paid', being here, having made requital of the loan to Yama, he goes freed from the debt to the world of heaven. If he does manifold things as it were,5 he should offer in the forest (fire) groats with his hand; the forest (fire) is Agni Vaievānara; verily he appeases him. On the Ekāṣṭakā, the TA. ii. 3. 1. 8 and MS, iv. 14. 17. These two texts have oprofitant, which is a mere blunder, and maycha, which is rather better, then both have aidhing and MS. carárah; they then read as o, d here (MS. accents anymo), and for d have jirann era práti tát te dadhámí (hastinrydní MS.). MCS. has pratidat to dadāmi.

- 1 This occurs also in GB, ii. 4. 8; Vait. xxiv. 16, and as vicioka vievadávye trá samjuhomi sound in MCS. ii. 5. 5. 19, which is probably merely a blunder for aum juhomi. It is very doubtful if vigralops refers to grain as the ritual is taken by the Sütras (Ap., Baudh., MÇS.), though Caland and Henry accept this view, and Caland seems to adopt it in his version of Vait. xxiv. 16. The fire used is praddwya, and this is not in all probability merely the fire of the burning of the Vedi but a real forest fire (cf. kakya below), and therefore elevalopa is some species of tree, as sug- gested in PW. and MW. (cf. caigralopa). The second half of the Mantra is varied in MCS. ii. 5, 5, 20, sanat sanasanda skah replacing samaamad.
- This is found in AV. vi. 79. 1 as midhaspatia with as o asamatim graces nah.
- This is found in AV. vi. 79, 2 as tedm no nabhaspata úrjam grhesu dhúraya | á pustám ete d vasu.
- 4 This is found in AV. vi. 79, 8, but only the first part agrees; see Whitney's note; the reading djyanim or djyanim is of course uncertain, but the comm. takes it as aksinatram, and this seems the more probable sense. Caland and Henry render it as 'les beurres', evidently misreading it as diponi, but this is utterly impossible. The balf-verse occurs below, iii, 4, 7 g
- 5 i.e. if there is good and bad done at the sacrifice; cf. i. 7, 6, 4.

divider of the days, he should cook a cake of four Çarāvas in size, and early with it should fire the thicket; if [4] it burns, it becomes a good season, if it does not burn, a bad season. By this mode of prognostication the seers of old used to undertake a long Sattra. He who knowing the seer, the hearer, the reciter, sacrifices, is united in yonder world with what he has sacrificed and bestowed. The seer is Agni, the hearer is Vāyu, the reciter Āditya; he, who offers knowing thus to them, in yonder world is united with what he has sacrificed and bestowed. 'May he from in front with the cloud' [5], he says; (he that is) from in front with the cloud is Agni; verily he says to Agni, 'Guard this for me.' 'Do thou, O lord of cloud', he says; the lord of cloud is Vāyu; verily he says to Vāyu, 'Guard this for me.' 'O god, that dost fatten', he says; the god that fattens is yonder Āditya; verily he says to Āditya, 'Guard this for me.'

The Special Animal Offerings

- iii. 3. 9. a This "young one I put around you, Playing with him that is dear do ye move; Afflict us not in birth, O ye prosperous ones; May we rejoice in increase of wealth, in food."
 - b Homage to thy greatness, to thine eye,
 O father of the Maruts, that do I sing;
 Be propitious, with a fair sacrifice may we offer;
 Be this oblation acceptable to the gods.
 - c This was the bundle of the gods,
 The germ of the waters smeared upon the plants;

¹ The point is that the Diksā for the Sattra takes place on the Ekāstakā; cf. Vedic Index, ii. 426. The Rais used this prognostication when entering on the Diksā.

Cf. KS. xiii. 9, 10; MS. ii. 5. 10. The ritual described is the offering of the aged bull when a new one is substituted; with a the new one is let loose, with b the old is brought up for offering, c accompanies the offering of the omentum; d the Havis offering, and c that to Agni Svistakrt; see ApCS. xix. 17. 1-5; BCS. xiv. 14; the five Mantras are mentioned in MCS. iii. 5. 18; Ap. uses here iii. 1. 11 h and f respectively also. See also Kauç. xiv. 21; xxv. 24.

4. 24: stim vo y. pruti dadhmo atra—edçām dau | md no hāsista jamişā subhāgd rāyāç ca pēşair abhi nah sacadheam. In PGS. iii. 9. 6; CGS. iii. 11. 14, the verse is found as in TS., but in PGS. patim is read and in CGS. mā vaceātra jamışā samvidānāh. Oldenberg (SBE. xxix. 101, 354) takes jamışa closely with the next word, and suggests mārashāta for the form nah cāpta, but this ignores the TS., and the accent on jamişā; cf. Whitney on AV. l.c. These two Sūtras use the text in the Vṛṣotsarga domestic rite.

KS. has uta tad graimah; MS. omits uti and te and ends aham gyne te; both have a quite different second half-verse. Pusan chose a drop of Soma[1]; A great stone was there then for them, d Father of calves, husband of cows,

And father too of great gulfs,
Calf, afterbirth, fresh milk, beestings, Clotted milk, curd, ghee is his seed.²

c Thee the cows chose for lordship, Thee the Maruts, sweet singers, hailed; Resting on the summit, the pinnacle, of lordly power, Then O dread one to us assign wealth.³

Unsuccessful is his animal offering for whom these (rites) are not performed; successful is the offering of him for whom they are performed.

iii. 3. 10. a Sūrya, the god, for those that sit in the sky, Dhātr for lordly power, Vāyu for offspring, Brhaspati for Prajāpati offer thee radiant.

b Thee have I united with the gods, Who hast a tawny embryo And a womb of gold, Whose limbs are uninjured.

c Bring near, O bringer, Remove away, O remover,
O Indra Nardabuda,
With the four quarters of the earth Do thou bring near.

d I split apart thy urinator,

Thy womb, the two groins, [1]

The mother and the child,

The embryo and the after-birth.

KS. has apan patir osadhinam, while MS, has vradhi before ésadhinam; both end the next half-line with pát tád doit.

MS. has utilyam for atho, and like KS. has you'd for retak.

MS, has vardhanti in b and kahibbhih doubtfully in c. The verse is not in KS.

For the Brähmana see TS. iii. 4. 1. This section deals with the case where it is found that the sacrificial animal is with young; if this is found out before the slaughtering a new animal is substituted; if not, then two oblations are offered with i. 4. 44 a and a here; with b he addresses the slaughtered victim; with c he moves the embryo pradaktinam; with d he cuts it out; with s he casts it down between the thighs; with f he puts a vessel to eatch the juices; with g he offers Ajya before the offering to Agni Svistakrt, and with h he deposits and covers up the embryo north of the Garhapatya or Çamitrawith extinguished ashes; see ApÇS. xix. 18, 16-19, 15; BÇS. xiv. 14; and cf. Yajyas for the Kamyestis described in ii. 4, 13, 1; TB. iii. 7, 8, 5, and TS. iii. 4.9; a-d are variants for the sacrifice to Indra and Brhaspati (ii. 4, 18, 1); e and f are used in the rite for vivici (TB, iii. 7. 3. 5); g-u accompany the five Devikahavises, the first two having each alternatives (i.e. g-k, 1-o, p and q, r and s, t and u). The verses in this case are only in a minor degree Rgvedic (a-c = iv. 49. 1, 2, 4; d = x. 42, 11; e = vi. 6. 3; f = v. 8, 3; p-s = ii, 32, 4-7); the rest have variants in the AV. from which, however, the text here considerably differs. PRAPĀTHAKA IV

The Optional and Occasional Offerings

iii. 4. 1. The sacrifice of him whose offering is too large is unsuccessful; 'Sūrya, the god, for those that sit in the sky', he says; verily with the aid of Brhaspati and Prajāpati he makes good the deficiency in the sacrifice. Now the Rakṣases infest the victim if it being offered to one deity is greater (than normal); 'Thou who hast a tawny embryo', he says; verily he sends it to the gods, to smite away the Rakṣases. 'Bring near, O bringer', he says [1]; verily with the holy power he brings it. 'I split apart thy urinator', he says; that is according to the text. 'The drop, far extending, of all forms', he says; the drop is offspring and cattle; verily with offspring and cattle he unites him. To the sky the deficiency of the sacrifice goes, to the earth the redundancy; if he were not to appease it, the sacrificer would be ruined; 'May the two great ones, sky and earth, for us' [2], he says; verily by means of sky and earth he appeases both the deficiency and the redundancy of the sacrifice; the sacrificer is not ruined. He covers (the offering) with ashes for the call of 'Godspeed'; now this is

Also with a in MS. iv. 12. 6; KS. xiii. 16; AÇS. i. 10. 8; ÇÇS. ix. 28. 8; MS. and KS. with the Sūtras have tispai, which is much easier to construe, as with does not govern the gen., which must therefore the embryo of these two; verily in these two he deposits it. If he were to cut off, he would make it redundant; if he were not to cut off, he would fail to cut off from the victim which has been offered; one portion he should cut off from in front of the navel, another behind it; the expiration is in front of the navel [3], the inspiration behind; verily he cuts off from the whole extent of the victim. He offers to Viṣṇu Çipiviṣṭa; Viṣṇu Çipiviṣṭa is the redundancy of the sacrifice, the greatness of the victim, the prosperity thereof; verily in the redundant he deposits the redundant, to appease the redundant. The sacrificial fee is gold of eight measures, for the (victim) has eight feet; the self is the ninth; (verily it serves) to win the victim. It is enveloped in a turban in an inner box, for so as it were is the victim, the omentum, the skin, the flesh, the bone; verily he obtains and wins the whole extent of the victim. He, for whom in the sacrifice this expiration is offered, by his sacrificing becomes richer.

iii. 4. 2. a O Nayu, drinker of the pure, come to us;

For thee the sweet drink hath been drawn,

Whereof, O God, thou hast the first drink.

b For intent thee, for desire thee, for prosperity thee; Kikkiṭā thy mind! to Prajāpati hail! Kikkiṭā thy breath, to Vāyu hail! Kikkiṭā thy eye, to Sūrya hail! Kikkiṭā thy ear, to sky and earth hail! Kikkiṭā thy speech, to Sarasvatī hail! [1] c Thou, the fourth, art the barren, the eager one,

Since once in thought the embryo hath entered thy womb;

Do thou, the barren, go eagerly to the gods,

d Thou art the goat, resting on wealth, sit on the earth, mount aloft on the atmosphere, in the sky be thy great radiance.

The reading of KS. is an appropriate or antimydam; ApCS. ix. 18, 16; 19, 11 agrees with TS.; cf. Vedic Index, ii. 174.

In KS, the hair replaces the caul. The comparison is with the cloth, and the three Koças in which the gold wrapped in a cloth is successively deposited. They are mentioned in KS, and in Ap. (In KS, p. 192, l. 9, icc should be read with D for are of Ch.)

Of. KS. xiii. 11, 12. For the Brahmana see TS. iii. 4. 3. This section gives the Mantras for the offering of a barren goat (so cook ajd seems to be taken) for one who desires prosperity; a accompanies the driving up, b the offering when the circumambulation with fire is proceeding; c the leading of the victim north, d the slaughtering, c the offering of the omentum, f the offering of the Havis, g the eating of the rest of the oblation by the priests, which is preceded by an offering on eight potaherds to Agni; see ApÇS. xix. 17. 6-17; BÇS. xiv. 15.

b kikkid is an exclamation, according to the comm, onomatopoetic, being an imitation of the sound made by men to cattle.

stand here, if it is identical with aid below, must mean 'barren', but this is probably a case where the line has been turned to a new use. As it stands the play on rapid rapid is shown by manasa. KS, has rapid rapid and is for tea. e Stretching the thread of the atmosphere do thou pursue the light; Guard the paths of light made by prayer.¹

g Thou art the offering of mind, the colour of Prajapati, may we share thy limbs.

iii. 4. 3. These3 two were together, Vayu blew them apart; they conceived a child, Soma generated it. Agni swallowed it. Prajapati saw this (offering) to Agni on eight potsherds, he offered it, and thereby he redeemed this (victim) from Agni. Therefore though sacrificing it to another god, still one should first offer on eight potsherds to Agni; verily redeeming it from Agni he offers it. Because [1] Vayu blew (them apart), therefore is it connected with Vayu: because these two conceived, therefore is it connected with sky and earth; because Soma generated, and Agni swallowed, therefore is it connected with Agni and Soma; because when the two parted speech was uttered, therefore is it connected with Sarasvati; because Prajapati redeemed it from Agni, therefore is it connected with Prajapati; the barren goat is connected with all the gods. To Vayu should he offer it who desires wealth; the swiftest deity is Vayu; verily he has recourse to Vayu with his own share [2], and he causes him to attain wealth. To sky and earth should he offer it who in ploughing desires support; verily from the sky Parjanya rains for him, plants spring up in this (earth), his corn prospers. To Agni and Soma should he offer it who desires, 'May I be possessed of food, an eater of food'; by Agni he wins food, by Soma the eating of food; verily he becomes possessed of food, an eater of food. To Sarasvatī should he offer it who [3], being able to utter speech, cannot utter speech; Sarasvatī is speech; verily he has recourse to Sarasvati with her own share, and she bestows speech upon him. To Prajāpati should he offer it who desires, 'May I gain that which has not been gained'; all the deities are Prajapati; verily by the deities he gains what has not been gained. He brings (the victims) up with a verse addressed to Vāyu; verily winning it from Vāyu he offers it. 'For intent thee, for desire thee !' [4] he says; that is according to the text. He offers with the sound kikkita; at the sound kikkita the domestic animals stop, the wild run away. In that he offers with the sound kikkitā, (it serves) to support domestic animals. He offers while the circumambulation by fire is taking place; verily alive he sends it to the world of heaven. 'Thou, the fourth, art the barren, the eager one', he says; verily he sends it to the gods. 'Be the desires of the sacrificer fulfilled', he says; this is the desire [5] of the sacrificer that (the sacrifice) should proceed to its conclusion without injury. 'Thou art the goat, resting in wealth', he says; verily in these worlds he makes it find support. 'In the sky be thy great radiance', he says; verily in the world of heaven he bestows light upon him. 'Stretching the thread of the atmosphere do thou pursue the light', he says; verily he makes these worlds full of light for him. 'Weave ye without a flaw the work of the singers' [6], he says; whatever flaw is committed in the sacrifice, this serves to atone for it. 'Become Manu; produce thou the host divine', he says; offspring are connected with Manu; verily he makes them fit for food. 'Thou art the offering of mind', he says, to make 'Godspeed'. 'May we share thy limbs', he says; verily he invokes this blessing. Of this (victim) there is one time unpropitious for sacrifice to the gods, when a cloud appears when it has been offered [7]; if a cloud should appear when it has been offered, he should either cast it into the waters or eat it whole; if he were to cast it into the waters, he would confuse the sacrifice; he should eat it whole; verily he bestows power upon himself. By three people is this to be performed, him who performs a year-long Sattra, him who offers with a thousand (gifts), and him who is a domestic sacrificer;1 with it let them sacrifice, for them is it fit.

b Prajapati bestowed victories on Indra The strong, he who is dread in battle contest, To him all the people bowed in reverence, For he waxed dread, worthy of offering.

The gods and the Asuras were in conflict. Indra had recourse to Prajāpati, to him he gave these victories (offerings); he offered them; then indeed

They should be offered by one engaged in conflict; verily does he win in the conflict.

iii. 4. 5. a Agni¹ overlord of creatures, may he help me; Indra of powers, Yama of earth, Vāyu of the atmosphere, Sūrya of the sky, Candramas of Nakṣatras, Bṛhaspati of holy power, Mitra of truths, Varuṇa of waters, the ocean of streams, food of lordships overlord, may it help me; Soma of plants, Savitṛ of instigations, Rudra of cattle, Tvaṣṭṛ of forms, Viṣṇu of mountains, the Maruts of troops overlords, may they help me.

c In this holy power, this worldly power, this prayer, this Purchitaship, this rite, this invocation of the gods.

iii. 4. 6. What3 the gods did at the sacrifice, the Asuras did. The gods saw these overpowering (Homas), they performed 4 them; the rite of the gods succeeded, that of the Asuras did not succeed. If he is desirous of prospering in a rite, then should he offer them, and in that rite he prospers. In that the All-gods brought together (the materials), the Abhyātānas are connected with the All-gods; in that Prajapati bestowed the victories (Jayas), therefore the Jayas are connected with Prajāpati [1]; in that they won the kingdom by the Rastrabhrts, that is why the Rastrabhrts (supporters of the kingdom) have their name. The gods overpowered the Asuras with the Abhyātānas, conquered them with the Jayas, and won the kingdom with the Rastrabhrts; in that the gods overpowered (abhyatanvata) the Asuras with the Abhyātānas, that is why the Abhyātānas have their name; in that they conquered (djayan) them with the Jayas, that is why the Jayas have their name; in that they won the kingdom with the Rastrabhrts, that is why the Rastrabhrts have their name. Then the gods prospered, the Asuras were defeated. He who has foes should offer these (offerings); verily by the Abhyātānas he overpowers his foes, by the Jayas he conquers them, by the Rastrabhrts he wins the kingdom; he prospers himself, his foe is defeated.

So the comm., but 'they overpowered them (the Asuras)' is, especially in view of § 2 below, much more probable.

There are six sets of oblations to the male and females (a-f) and then five in the 'mouth' of the chariot (g).
- This may be of course concrete, but probably it is abstract as in iii. 4. 5 c, where the context favours the abstract sense. On the other hand iii. 4. 7 m may be held to favour the concrete. The adjectives apply to the Apsarases, not to the predicates.
- ³ bekarayah is of uncertain sense; 'melodious' is equally or more probable; see Vedic Index, ii. 73.

- * bhujpih is uncertain in sense; PW. suggesta 'adder' (i.e. as the flexible); CB. ix. 4. 1. 10 suggests 'beneficent' (see Eggeling, SBE. xlifi, 232, n. 2).
- edhagah has here most probably this sense.
 Found above as regards c and d in iii. 3. 8 f.
- The use of the verses h-m is not clear; only k has a parallel in the other Safihitas (MS. ii. 12.2 reading amydayning first), and the five oblations in the other cases seem to be done with g only. Possibly, however, here there are ten, first five with g, and then five more, but this is hardly consistent with the fact that h-l are each meant for a double oblation. There is therefore the possibility that g and m are each for single oblations, and h-l make up eight more, giving ten (cf. ApÇS. xvii. 20.5 panelhatir juhati daga vol.

They should be offered on the mouth of the chariot for him who desires force; the Rastrabhrts are force, the chariot is force; verily by force he wins force for him; he becomes possessed of force. They should be offered for him who is expelled from his kingdom; to all his chariots he should say, 'Be yoked'; 3 verily he yokes the kingdom for him [2]. The oblations of him whose realm is not in order are disordered; he should take off the right wheel of his chariot and offer in the box; so he puts in order his oblation, and the kingdom comes into order in accord with their coming into order. They should be offered when battle is joined; the Rastrabhrts are the kingdom, and for the kingdom do they strive who go to battle together; he for whom first they offer prospers, and wins this battle. The kindling-wood is from the Madhuka tree [3]; the coals shrinking back make the host of his * foe to shrink back. Of Nyagrodha, Udumbara, Açvattha, or Plakşa (wood) is the kindling-wood; these are the homes of the Gandharva and the Apsarases; verily he appeases them in their own abode [4]. tising witchcraft; so he fastens on his breaths from in front,1 and then at pleasure lays him low. He offers in a natural cleft or hollow; that of this (earth) is seized by misfortune; verily on (a place) seized by misfortune he makes misfortune seize upon him. With what is harsh in speech he utters the Vasat call; verily with the harshness of speech he cuts him down; swiftly he is ruined. If he desire of a man, 'Let me take his eating of food' [5], he should fall at length in his hall,2 and (with the words), 'O lord of the world', gather blades of grass; the lord of the world is Prajapati; verily by Prajapati he takes his eating of food. 'Here do I take the eating of food of N. N., descendant of N. N.', he says; verily he takes his eating of food. With six (verses) he takes, the seasons are six; verily the seasons having taken by Prajapati his eating of food bestow it on him [6]. If the head of a family is expelled, they should be offered for him, placing him on a mound and cooking a Brahman's mess of four Caravas in size; the Rastrabhrts are pre-eminence, the mound is pre-eminence; verily by preeminence he makes him pre-eminent among his equals. (The offering) is of four Caravas in size; verily he finds support in the quarters; it is made in milk; verily he bestows brilliance upon him; he takes it out,3 to make it cooked; it is full of butter, for purity; four descended from Rsis partake of it; verily he offers in the light of the quarters.

iii. 4. 9. He * who desires offspring should offer (the oblations to) the minor deities; the minor deities are the metres, offspring are as it were the metres; verily by the metres he produces offspring for him. He makes Dhātṛ first; verily he produces pairing with him, Anumati gives approval to him, Rākā gives, Sinīvālī produces, and in offspring when produced by Kuhū he places speech. These (offerings) also should he make who desires cattle; the minor deities are the metres, cattle are as it were the metres [1]; verily by the metres he produces offspring for him. He makes Dhātṛ first; by him he scatters, Anumati gives approval to him, Rākā gives, Sinīvālī produces, and by Kuhū he establishes offspring when produced. These (offerings) also should he make who desires a village; the minor deities are the metres, a village is as it were the metres; verily by the metres he wins a village for him [2]. He puts Dhātṛ in the middle; verily he places him in the middle has a village for the metres of the metres of the metres has a village for him [2]. He puts Dhātṛ in the middle; verily he places him in the middle of the metres of the metres of the metres of the metres of the metres of the metres has a village for him [2]. This is rather difficult. The comm. thinks of a village. These (offerings) also should be offer who is long ill; the minor deities are the metres, the metres are unfavourable to him whose illness is long; verily by the metres he makes him well. He puts Dhatr in the middle, it is not in order in the middle of him whose illness is long; verily thereby in the middle he puts (things) in order for him. These (offerings) also [3] should he offer to whom the sacrifice does not resort; the minor deities are the metres, the metres do not resort to him to whom the sacrifice does not resort. He puts Dhatr first; verily in his mouth he places the metres; the sacrifice resorts to him. These (offerings) also should be make who has sacrificed; the minor deities are the metres, the metres of him who has sacrificed are worn out as it were. He puts Dhatr last [4]; verily afterwards he wins for him metres unwearied; the next sacrifice resorts to him. These (offerings) should be make to whom wisdom does not resort; the minor deities are the metres, the metres do not resort to him to whom wisdom does not resort. He puts Dhatr first; verily in his mouth he places the metres; wisdom resorts to him. These (offerings) also should he make [5] who desires brilliance; the minor deities are the metres, brilliance is as it were the metres; verily by the metres he bestows brilliance upon him. They are made in milk; verily he bestows brilliance upon him. He puts Dhatr in the middle; verily he places him in the middle of brilliance. Anumati is the Gayatri, Raka the Tristubh, Sinīvālī the Jagatī, Kuhū the Anuştubh, Dhātr the Vasat call. Rākā is the first fortnight, Kuhū the second, Sinīvalī the new moon (night), Anumati the full moon (night), Dhātr the moon. The Vasus are eight [6], the Gāyatrī has eight syllables; the Rudras are eleven, the Tristubh has eleven syllables; the Ādityas are twelve, the Jagatī has twelve syllables, the Anuştubh is Prajāpati, the Vasat call Dhatr. Thus indeed the minor deities are all the metres and all the gods and the Vasat call. If he were to offer them all at once, they would be likely to burn him up; he should offer first two, and a third for Dhatr, and then offer likewise the last two; thus they do not burn him up, and for whatever desire they are offered that he obtains by them.

iii. 4. 10. a O ¹ Vastospati, accept us; take vasa/kāraḥ as the subject and all the rest as pred. gives better grammar (though a after deckaḥ would be natural), but the sense is strained.
Be of kind entrance for us and free from ill;

This is not clear: the comm. takes devikah as the subject and the rest as predicates, but this is very strange as rangeleval on would be necessary: possibly the second sentence is, as Weber indicates, intended to be 'the Vasat call is all the deities', but here again this is unnatural and not borne out by the text. I suspect dhaid should be inserted before cusukarah. To

Of. MS. i. 5. 3. This section contains the Mantras and Brahmana for the offering to Vastospati, of one who is going on a journey with his graa, which the comm. on ApCS, renders wife, but which no

b O Vastospati, may we be comrades of thee

In that evening and morning he offers the Agnihotra the sacrificer thus piles up the oblation bricks [1]; the bricks of him who has established a sacred fire are the days and nights; in that he offers evening and morning, verily he obtains the days and nights, and making them into bricks piles them up. He offers ten in the same place; the Virāj has ten syllables; verily having obtained the Viraj, he makes it into a brick and piles it up; verily in the Viraj he obtains the sacrifice; the piling up must be repeated by him.3 Therefore that is the place of sacrifice where he advances having spent ten (nights); not suitable is the place where (he spends) less time than that [2]. Now Vastospati is Rudra. If he were to go on without offering to Vastospati, the fire becoming Rudra would leap after him and slay him; he offers to Vāstospati; verily with his own share he appeases him; the sacrificer does not come to ruin. If he were to offer with the chariot yoked, that would be as when one offers an oblation on a place he has left; if he were to offer without the chariot being yoked, that would be as when one offers an oblation at rest; verily no offering would be made to Vastospati [3]. The right (animal) is yoked, the left not yoked, and thus he offers to Vastospati; verily he does both, and appeases him completely. If he were to offer with one (verse) he would make (it) a ladle offering; 4 having pronounced the Puronuvākyā he offers with the Yajya, to win the gods. If he were to load 6 (his cart) after the offering, he would make Rudra enter his house. If he were to set out without extinguishing the smouldering embers,5 it would be like a confusion of the sacrifice or a burning. 'This is thy birthplace in season', (with these words) he places (the embers) on the kindling-sticks [4]; this is the birthplace of Agni; verily he mounts it on its own birthplace. Now they say, 'If being placed on the kindling-sticks it should be lost, his fire would be dispersed, it would have to be piled up again. With thy

To him he proclaimed these shares in the Stoma, therefore people were propagated with Vasistha as their Purohita;3 therefore a Vasistha should be chosen as the Brahman priest; verily he is propagated. 'Thou art the ray; for dwelling thee! Quicken the dwelling' [1], he says; the dwelling is the gods; verily to the gods he announces the sacrifice. 'Thou art advance; for right thee! Quicken right', he says; right is men; verily to men he announces the sacrifice. 'Thou art following; for sky thee! Quicken the sky', he says; verily to these worlds he announces the sacrifice. 'Thou art a prop; for rain thee! Quicken rain', he says; verily he wins rain [2]. 'Thou art blowing forward; thou art blowing after', he says, for pairing. 'Thou art the eager; for the Vasus thee! Quicken the Vasus', he says; the Vasus are eight, the Rudras eleven, the Adityas twelve; so many are the gods; verily to them he announces the

This passage clearly shows that the new moon was regarded as beginning the month, but not so clearly whether the new moon was the beginning or just before the beginning. The former view seems proved, however, by the reference in pairmandisim distincts. Cf. Thibaut, Ind. Ant. xxiv. 88.

iii. 5. 3. a By Agni, the god, I win battles, with the Gayatri metre, the Trivṛt Stoma, the Rathantara Saman, the Vaṣaṭ call, the thunderbolt, I trample under foot my foes born before me, I depress them, I repel them, in this home, in this world of earth; him who hateth us and him whom we hate I step over him with the stride of Viṣṇu.

b By Indra, the god, I win battles, with the Tristubh metre, the Pancadaça Stoma the Brhat Saman, the Vaşat call, the thunderbolt [1], c By the All-gods I win battles, with the Jagatr metre, the Saptadaça Stoma, the Vāmadevya Sāman, the Vasat call, the thunderbolt, (I trample under foot my foes) born after (me), &c.

(I trample under foot my foes) born along (with me), &c.

iii. 5. 4. a The gods, destroying the sacrifice, stealing the sacrifice,

- 1 This section gives the verses of the Vishvatikrama, which, with the Atimoka in iii. 5. 4, is given a place in the ritual before i. 4. 43 l in BÇS. viii. 6 (cf. xiv. 20); a similar place is given by ApÇS. iv. 14. 9, 10 (cf. xiii. 18. 8-10). The first Mantra (taken in the comm. as d and e) is used as he reverses the Ahavaniya. d and e find places in the offering of the Çukra and Manthin cups; see Caland and Henry, D'Agnistona, p. 206, who (p. 296 n.) rather minimize the importance of these two Anuvâkas.
- ³ Cf. KS. v. 6; xxxii. 6; MS. i. 4. 8, 9. This section gives the Atimokṣa Mantras which are placed by ĀpÇS. iv. 14. 10 and BÇS. viii. 6 after the Viṣnvatikramas. In BÇS. xiv. 20, 21 the exact ritual is given as an offering in four parts in the Garhapatya with a; then an advance with b to the Āgnīdhra where a similar offering is made with c; an advance to the Āhavanīya with f. See also MÇS. i. 4. 8, 16.

That sit in the atmosphere,

From them may Vayu guard me; May we go to those that do good deeds.

From them may Surya guard me;
May we go to those that do good deeds.

f That highest oblation wherewith, O All-knower, Thou didst collect milk for Indra, Therewith, O Agni, do thou make him grow; Bestow on him lordship over his fellows."

The gods are destroyers of the sacrifice, stealers of the sacrifice [2]; they sit these worlds taking and destroying from him who gives and sacrifices. 'The gods, destroyers of the sacrifice, that sit on the earth, that (sit) in the atmosphere, that sit in the sky', he says; verily traversing the worlds, he goes to the world of heaven with his household, with his cattle. From him who has sacrificed with the Soma (sacrifice), the deities and the sacrifice depart; he should offer to Agni on five potsherds as the final act; all the deities are Agni [3], the sacrifice is fivefold; verily he wins the deities and the sacrifice. Now Agni is connected with the Gayatri and has the Gayatri as his metre; he severs him from his metre, if he offers on five potsherds; it should be made on eight potsherds; the Gayatri has eight syllables, Agni is connected with the Gayatri and has the Gayatri for his metre; verily he unites him with his own metre. The Yajya and the Anuvakya are in

This section gives the Mantras for the Aditya Graha in the third pressing; with a the Adhvaryu covers the cup with Darbha blades on his hand, with b he takes it up, with f he moves it, with c he shakes it with the applicancement stone so that the drops touch the grass; d is used optionally for one desiring rain, f accompanies the actual oblation according to the comm., and g accompanies the casting into the fire of the Darbha; h is used with homage to the sacrificial post; see ApCS. xiii. 9. 12-10. 3; variant uses are given in BCS. viii. 9; xiv. 21; MCS. ii. 5. 1. 6, 7, 10; Caland and Henry, L'Agmistoma, pp. 831-833. Curiously enough the other texts have no parallel. For other uses of f and g see Caland and Henry, p. 406.

1 In this section are given various Mantras connected with the wife of the sacrificer, which really should have been given above in i. 2-4; a is used just before i. 2. 2 i to accompany the girding of the wife at the Dikal; see ApCS. z. 9. 16, and cf. BCS. vi. 5; Caland and Henry, L'Agnissoma, p. 18; b-d are used while the Pratiprasthatr makes her go into the hut after the final oblation, c being said by her as she goes to the Garhapatys, where is her permanent place, and d muttered thereafter; see ApCS. xi. 16. 9, 40, and cf. Caland and Henry, p. 14; e is used (before t. 4. 45. 8 according to ApCS. viii. 8. 12) as she loosens her girdle; see ApCS, xiii, 20, 18; f is used before i, 3, 18 & when the wife is led up by the Nestr, and with g and &, which are really used after i. S. 18 k (the first part being common) with two parts of one rite, the drawing and the depositing, the Adhvaryu puts water into her goblet, or she, according to Ap., does it herself; see ApQS, xii. 5, 12-14, and cf.

BCS. vii. 8; Caland and Henry, pp. 140-142; with i the Nestr causes the Udgate to look at the wife, and she says k, denuding herself and pouring water along her limbs; see ApCS. xiii. 15. 8-11; BCS. viii. 15, and cf. Caland and Henry, pp. 371, 372.

In AV. xiv. 2. 70 there is a secondary version s. c. n. payand prthicydly s. c. n. pdyanningschindm s. c. n. p. didnena sa samnaddha sanuhi rajum emeim; upah is very curious with instr. all round, and MGS. i. 11. 6 has addhib. In AV. it is used in the marriage ritual.

3 This and the next verse occur in i. 1. 10

f and g.

This is difficult and not very intelligible, especially with dadaiss. The comm. takes it as 'go to take the Pannejani waters, rise up (quickly); may the instigator (comb) of the sacrifice, Agni, fasten you in front, Aditi accord you a road in the middle'; youd is either younth or 'freed from attackers'. I have accepted Caland and Henry's for want of a better version.

i In the sight of thee that art all, that hast all, that hast manly power [2], O Agni, in the lovers, may I deposit all seed.

k The sacrifice hath come to the gods, the goddesses have left the sacrifice for the gods, to the sacrificer that poureth blessings, accompanied by the cry 'Hail!', standing in the waters, do ye follow the Gandharva, in the rush of the wind, food that is praised."

iii. 5. 7. The 3 Vaşat call cleft the head of the Gayatrī; its sap fell away, it entered the earth, it became the Khadira; he, whose dipping-spoon is make of Khadira wood, cuts off with the sap of the metres; his oblations are full of sap. Soma was in the third sky from hence; the Gayatrī fetched it, a leaf of it was cut off, that became the Parna, that is why the Parna is so called. He whose ladle is made of Parna wood [1] has his oblations acceptable; the gods rejoice in his oblation. The gods discussed regarding holy power; the Parna overheard it; he whose ladle is made of Parna wood is styled famous; he hears no evil bruit.4 The Parna is holy power, the Maruts are the people, the people are food, the Acvattha is connected with the Maruts; he whose ladle is made of Parna wood, and his spoon (upabhrt) is of Acvattha, by holy power wins food, and the holy class [2] puts over the people. The Parna is the royalty, the Acvattha is the people; in that the ladle is made of Parna wood and the spoon of Acvattha, verily he puts the royalty over the people. Prajapati sacrificed; where the oblation found support, thence sprung the Vikankata; there he created offspring; the oblation of him whose Dhruvā is made of Vikankata wood finds rest; verily he is propagated. That is the form of the offering-spoons; on him whose spoons are so formed all forms of cattle attend, nothing unshapely is born in him.

iii. 5. 8. a Thou s art taken with a support; for Prajapati thee, for him full of Caland and Henry make the woman the subject, and take dnu as meaning in 'the manner of' and dhiriya as 'receive'; if the man speaks then it must be 'place', and ramir dnu may mean 'in', but it is very doubtful. The comm. takes the Adhvaryu as the subject following Ap. and dhiriya as patnyam shapayeya.

This line is, as Caland and Henry say, really hopeless: idial they render as if idd were meant, against the Pada, and to in BCS. xiv. 22 as being mentioned in the TS.

The comm. takes sucrive an induce as referring to the tree, but probably wrongly; name here may be merely 'indeed' but not necessarily; rather the sense is 'he is called well famed' as opposed to the 'evil bruit' referred to. For the trees see Vedic Index, s.vv.

⁵ Cf. KS. xxix. 5; KapS. xiv. 6; MS. i. 3. 35. For the Brähmana see TS. iii. 5. 9. This section gives the Dadhi Graha, which is performed before the first pressing and after the preparation of the water for the Soma rite; with a he draws the Dadhi, the last three phrases accompanying the Upasthana; with 5 he leaves the Havirdhana, and offers with c in the Ahavanīya, light, thee full of light I take; for Daksa who increases cleverness, (thee) that are acceptable to the gods, thee for those whose tongue is Agni, who are righteous, whose highest is Indra, whose king is Varuṇa, whose friend is Vata, whose breath is Parjanya, for sky thee, for atmosphere thee, for earth thee!

b Smite away, O Indra, the mind of him who hateth us,

Who desireth to oppress us,

c For expiration thee, for inspiration thee, for cross-breathing thee; for being thee, for not being thee; for the waters thee, for the plants; for all beings thee; whence offspring arose unhurt, for that thee, for Prajapati, of bounteous gifts, full of light, (thee) full of light I offer.

iii. 5. 9. To 1 that deity whom the Adhvaryu and the sacrificer overlook do they fall victims; he should draw the cup of curd for Prajapati, all the gods are Prajapati; verily they make reparation to the gods. This is the foremost of cups; verily he for whom it is drawn attains a foremost place. This cup is the form of all the deities; on him for whom it is drawn all forms of cattle attend. 'Thou are taken with a support [1]; for Prajapati thee, for him full of light, (thee) full of light I take', he says; verily he makes him a light of his equals. 'For those whose tongue is Agni, who are righteous', he says; so many are the deities; verily for all of them he draws it. 'Smite away, O Indra, the mind of him who hateth us', he says, for the smiting away of foes. 'For expiration thee, for inspiration thee', he says; verily he bestows the breaths on the sacrificer. 'For that thee, for Prajapati, of bounteous gifts, full of light, (thee) full of light I offer' [2], he says; all the deities are Prajapati; verily for all the deities he offers it. He should draw the cup of butter 2 for one who desires brilliance; butter is brilliance; verily he becomes brilliant; he should draw the cup of Soma for one who desires splendour; Soma is splendour; verily he becomes resplendent; he should draw the cup of curd for one who desires cattle; curd is strength, cattle are strength; verily by strength he wins him strength and cattle.

xii. 7. 8-16; Caland and Henry, L'Agnigloma, p. 149.

This section deals with a part of the Gavam Ayana Sattra, the Atigrahya cups and the Prana cups. There are five of the former, and a is said as they are all drawn from the middle bowl, the other four, one Mix with the sweet what is sweeter than sweet, I have won with the mead the mead.

this is thy birthplace; for Prajapati thee!

He draws the Prāṇa cups; so much is there as are these cups, these Stomas, these metres, these Pṛṣṭha (Stotras), these quarters; whatever there is [1] that he wins. The highest Brahmans have proclaimed these before; they have therefore won all the quarters. He for whom these are drawn attains supremacy, he conquers the quarters. Five are drawn, the quarters are five; verily they prosper in all the quarters. Nine each are drawn; nine are the vital airs in man; verily upon the sacrificers he bestows the vital airs. At the beginning and at the end they are drawn; the Prāṇa cups are the vital airs [2]; verily they begin with the vital airs, and end with the vital airs. Now offspring leave their vital airs in that the Vāmadevya (Sāman) departs from its norm; on the tenth day the Vāmadevya departs from its norm; in that they are drawn on the tenth day, offspring leave not their vital airs.

iii. 5. 11. a Bring forward with meditation divine The god, who knoweth all; in each quarter, having been drawn into one bowl and added to that in the middle. and b accompanies the usual drawing and setting down; the rite is on the second last day of the sacrifices ; see ApCS. xxi. 21. 14-22. 4; BCS. xiv. 22. The Prana Grahas occur either on the first or last days or the tenth day; the Mantras used are those in TS. iv. 3. 2 according to the comm., following BCS. xiv. 22, and the mode of procedure is as in the case of the Proni Grahas (TS, iii. 3. 5); nine shoots are used in each; a different account is given in ApCS, xxl. 18, 6-20, where there are ten Mantras and the nine refer to the parts of the Mantras, or there are nine Mantras and where an elaborate interchange of the portions of Soma meted out with the Mantras in iii. 3. 5 and in iv. 3. 2 is ordered.

This is RV. x. 120. S, which, however, has som addit si and yodhit. yodhi may be an aor, from yodh or a second impr. from you (irregular) or a third pass. aor., but in all probability it is only a blunder. Cf. AA. i. 3, 4.

The norists here are very strange, as the true sense can only be given by a distinct effort. With purd, however, the idlom is not rare in the Brahmana style; see Delbrück, Altind. Synt. p. 286.

287 The Mantras of the Hotr in the Animal Sacrifice [-iii. 5. 11

May he duly bear our sacrifices.

- b He, the Hotr, is led forward for the sacrifice,
 The servant of the gods;
 Like a covered chariot glowing He himself knoweth health.¹
- c This Agni rescueth
 Us from the immortal race,
 He that is stronger than strength,
 The god made for life.
- d In the place of Ida we set thee down, On the navel of the earth, O Agni, all-knower, To bear the oblation [1].
- © O Agni, of kindly aspect, do thou with the All-gods Sit first on the birthplace made of wool, Nest-like, rich in ghee, for Savitr Do thou lead well the sacrifice, for the sacrificer.
- f Sit thou, O Hoty, in thine own world, wise, Place thou the sacrifice in the birthplace of good deeds;
 Eager for the gods, do thou sacrifice to them with oblation;
 O Agni, bestow great strength on the sacrificer.
- g The Hotr hath sat him down in the place of the Hotr, wise, Glittering, shining, skilful, With vows and foresight undeceived, most wealthy, Bearing a thousand, pure-tongued Agni.⁴
- h Thou art the envoy, thou [2] our guardian, Thou, O bull, leadest us to better fortune;
 O Agni, be thou the guardian of our offspring, our descendants
 In their bodies, unfailing and radiant.
- i To thee, O god Savitr, Lord of things delightful, We come for fortune, O thou of constant help.⁵
- k May the great ones, sky and earth, Mingle for us this sacrifice, May they sustain us with support.⁶
- 1 96h is mysterious and uncertain: pṛṭhakbariā in the comm. is not helpful. And what is the metaphor? Possibly a covered chariot secures the health of the passengers!
- The comm. ingeniously takes janmana, as 'from birth' and amfall becomes equivalent to an instr.
- Savity as the sacrificer is a possible conception; possibly Savity is the object,

- and yojamanaya is an ethical dative.
- 4 ádabdhavratopramath is rendered by Macdonell, Fed. Gramm. p. 143, 'superior minded owing to unbroken observances', which is possibly the better version. adabhavratah may be restored; cf. Oldenberg, Rgeeda-Noten, i. 193.
- s sidoran is read in the TS, as in RV. Pada.
- Found above in iii. 3, 10 h, also in full. Cf. p. 288, n. 3.

- ? Thee, O Agni, from the lotus Atharvan passed out, From the head of every priest.¹
- m Thee [3] the sage, Dadhyañc, Son of Atharvan, doth kindle, Slayer of Vṛṭra, destroyer of forts.
- n Thee Pathya Vṛṣan doth kindle, Best slayer of foes, Winner of booty in every conflict.
- o Let men say too, 'Agni hath been born, slayer of Vrtra, Winning booty in every conflict.'
- p Whom, like a quoit in their hands, Like a child at birth, they bear, Agni, fair sacrificer of the folk.²
- q Bring forward the god, best finder of riches, For offering to the gods; May he sit down in his own birthplace [4].
- r In the all-knower cause to rest The dear guest on birth, In a pleasant place, the lord of the house.
- s By Agni is Agni kindled,

 The wise, the young, the lord of the house,

 The bearer of the oblation, with ladle in his mouth.
- t Thou, O Agni, by Agni,

 The sage by the sage, the good by the good,

 The comrade by the comrade, art kindled.
- u Him they make bright, the wise, Victorious in the contests, Strong in his abodes.
- v By the sacrifice the gods sacrificed the sacrifice;
 These were the first ordinances;
 These mighty powers frequent the vault
 Where are the ancient Sādhya gods.

² Lanman's suggestion (Nown Ind. p. 548) of histone is rejected by Oldenberg, i. 377, by taking khādinam as an acc. of khādi, which is very probable (Lanman, p. 378), though ApÇS. xiii. 13. 7 has hastena dharyamanaya,

2 s and t are found in i, 4, 46 t and m also in full. Cf. p. 287, n. 6.
